Soviets Issue Warning

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet government warned tonight that what it called the latest U. S. escalation of the war in Vietnam will "inevitably lead to the necessary retaliatory steps."

A statement issued by the official Soviet news agency Tass condemned Washington's course as dangerous "because it further aggravates the international situation and may bring the world to a dangerous point."

The statement said, "Soviet official quarters are drawing corresponding conclusions from the new criminal actions of the American imperialists." It did not spell out what these actions are or what "necessary retaliatory steps" will be taken.

This was the first official response in Moscow to the widening of bombing targets in Vietnam ordered by the United States last week.

"The U.S. aggression against Vietnam is assuming an ever more extensive and sinister nature," the statement declared.

It was read on Soviet radio and television simultaneously with its release by Tass news agency, insuring the broadest possible reception by the Soviet people.

The statement consisted basically of positions already taken by the Soviet government. The repetition of these in connection with the stepping up of the Vietnamese war was apparently meant to make Washington pause and reconsider before going any further.

It was left open which government or governments would take the threatened retaliatory steps. There was nothing in the wording itself to make this necessarily refer to the Soviet Union. It could mean only that North Vietnam and the Viet Cong would fight back harder.

But the threat was definitely created that some more dangerous form of retaliation might be undertaken.

Lester H. Bishop Re-elected Director of Sikeston PCA

Chester Lauck, Hot Springs, Ark., the "Lum" of an old nationwide radio program, told an audience of 1,300, gathered for the 34th annual meeting of the Sikeston Production Credit Association at the National Guard Armory:

"We may be living high on the hog, but it's not our hog--it belongs to our children and our children's children."

Lester H. Bishop, East Prairie, was director of the association. His opponent was Carl Simpkins, also of East Prairie.

The program opened at 7:30 p.m. last night with Paul Bradley, New Madrid, president in charge. The invocation was given by Gene Lancaster, Portageville.

Lauck, retired from radio in 1955, as co-partner in the Lum and Abner comedy hour in the "Jot 'Em Down Store," series for 25 years.

"We have made more contributions in this world than all other countries combined--and all of it was due to our free enterprize system," Lauck said.

Lauck said he read that, "just before World War II our farmers produced enough for ten families, and today they are producing enough for 30 families and have stored $8 billion in commodities.

"Compare this with Russia, who is not producing enough for their own people," he said.

"I'm concerned about our national debt and our socialistic programs. We're even getting something we didn't ask for, and it's causing us to lose our self respect. I think people in the middle west are a pretty steady stock and are industrious. They want an opportunity to do what they are capable of doing.

"We are going to have to make a choice," said Lauck, "by building our own character, or building our own destruction."

In a business meeting, Charles Causey, Bloomfield, vice-president, gave a directors report.

Thatcher Scism, manager of the central office in Sikeston, gave a financial report for the first six months of 1967 showing loans made, 1,290 and 1,372; respectively, amount of loans, $15,593,271 and $17,239,727; cost of loans 5.07 per cent and 6 per cent; loans outstanding, $21,892,896 and $24,975,841; net income in 1966 was $163,179.72. interest from loans for the same period was $577,255 and $706,246, with a total income of $690,014 and $828,415. Total assets were $23,841,174 and $26,950,162, with a net worth of $3,238,870 and $3,411,353.

Each of the eight field offices at Sikeston, Charleston, Dexter, Poplar Bluff, Jackson, Portageville, Advance and Lutesville, presented door prizes.

Entertainment was furnished by the Ramblers, composed of David Bird, Barbara Armour and Bob Lambert, all of Sikeston.

A second group of entertainers, known as The Lamplighters of the Ark-Mo. Power company, entertained with six numbers. The members are Bill Lovelace and Jack Tapp, both of Blytheville, and Otha Odom and Arthur Cleveland, both of Walnut Ridge, Ark., and Ron Seal of Kennett.

The vote for the electrical utilities was: Ward I, 129 for, 44 against; ward II, 244, 22; ward III, 51, 32.

The vote for the gas utilities was: ward I, 129 for, 44 against; ward II, 247, 23; ward III, 54, 30.

The 20-year lease expires in a few months. The renewal also provides for a 20-year franchise with an option not to renew at the end of 10 years.

Train Blast Evacuates 6,000

TEXARKANA, Tex. (AP) — Explosions and fire erupted in four derailed chemical cars of a freight train today, forcing the evacuation of 6,000 persons in a 1½-mile area and injuring 10 persons.

The evacuations were ordered as a precaution against possible poisonous fumes from the chemicals.

Fire and police officials issued an all clear at 10 a.m. after the fire burned itself out and residents began returning to their homes.

Seven of the injured were Texarkana firemen and three were Red Cross workers who were called in to help care for the evacuees. The injured were taken to a hospital for emergency treatment of cuts and burns. None was believed seriously hurt.

The evacuees were moved into four school buildings and the Marine Corps Reserve Center.

The derailment occurred Tuesday night on the grounds of the International Creosote plant. The area is about two miles off U.S. 59 on the southwest edge of this city which straddles the Texas-Arkansas line.

Police said nine cars were derailed and four were on fire. All fire fighting equipment was moved back from the scene because of the possibility of more explosions.

One car was loaded with what the State Department of Public Safety called "a highly explosive chemical." Another contained nitric acid, another liquid plastic, one fertilizer and at least two held naphtha.

Cause of the derailment was not immediately determined.

TEENAGERS IN SUNSET began a painting and cleaning project today on Alabama Street. The group is working every day till school starts, and will then work after school in work parties to improve the appearances of the area.

CHARLES LAMBERT, left, and Johnnie Stewart began cutting weeds near a house at Alabama and North streets in Sunset today. The youths are participating in a project to improve the appearances of the area.

Work Project Begins

The first visible outgrowth of the plans proposed by Recovery Inc. and the Missourians, a group of young Negro leaders in Sunset, appeared today.

About 60 teenage boys and girls have volunteered to paint houses, cut weeds, dispose of trash and clean up the Sunset area, Carolyn Gardner, team captain of one group of girl workers, said.

Miss Gardner received several gallons of paint and some brushes today from Dr. Robert Lively, chairman of the Community Betterment Committee of Recovery Inc.

Dr. Lively said downtown merchants were contributing the paint and brushes. Shad Old, committee member, said that a surprising number of merchants and other concerned individuals were anxious to contribute materials to such a project.

The work is being done by the youths of Sunset. They have undertaken a crash program to completely clean up Alabama street, hopefully this week. They will then work on North street.

About 16 property owners have been contacted and are willing to allow the youths to paint their houses or the trimmings. Some houses could not be improved by paint alone, and the teenagers have no remedy for them. But they are clearing weeds and litter, where they find them.

City equipment including lawn mowers and dump trucks will be available for hauling trash on Saturdays.

The teenagers volunteered for the project when two members of the Missourians approached them this week. Lewis Wiggins and George Wolfe talked to the youths at the Sunset Improvement Club and about 60 volunteered.

Groups are divided into six boys or girls. Each group has a captain and a team leader to co-ordinate the work.

Although the youths are receiving no pay, they are anxious to do as much as they can, before school starts, Miss Gardner said.

But they plan to continue improving the area after school, next week. Long range plans have not been made, but the project is expected to continue for a month or more, Wolfe said.

A block party is planned for the group when they complete their work on Alabama street. Refreshments will be provided by the persons living on Alabama.

Wolfe was bringing rakes and cycles to the boys engaged in clearing a lot of weeds this morning. He said a city mower would arrive later today to cut the weeds shorter.

Bill Stokes, superintendent of the street department, met with one working group this morning and asked if he could bring them any other equipment. They requested some brooms.

The young men team captains are: Eddie Marshall, Dennis Snelling, Bobby Lambert, Johnnie Stewart, Otis Applewhite, Charles Lambert and Arthur Jackson.

Girl team captains are: Viola Blow, Gail Warfield, Elizabeth Geralds, Everlean Gipson and Pearl Grant.

British Accuse China Of Uncivil Behavior

LONDON (AP) — The British Foreign Office accused the Communist Chinese today of breaking "all normal rules of civilized behavior" in burning the British diplomatic mission in Peking.

A spokesman said whether Britain maintains diplomatic relations with Red China depends entirely on "the attitude and behavior of the Chinese authorities."

Sources said a break in diplomatic relations did not appear imminent. But British officials imposed tight restrictions on the movement of Chinese diplomats in this country in retaliation for the burning of the building in Peking Tuesday.

Fifty-four members of the British mission, including dependents, were reported to have taken refuge in friendly embassies in Peking after rampaging Red Guards set fire to the building and beat staff members.

The British government reacted with swift anger over the incident in which British charge d'affaires, Donald Hopson, and nine other mission staff members were pummeled and humiliated in front of a screaming mob.

Britain charged that Mao Tse-tung's regime was behind the attack and linked it to Peking's campaign to harass British rule in the crown colony of Hong Kong.

Sources in Whitehall believed it unlikely, however, that the incident would prompt Britain to sever relations with China. One source said the Foreign Office "has learned not to react in pique." Another said the British will "sit tight."

The Foreign Office branded the attack "an outrageous and uncivilized act which would bring the Chinese government into disrepute throughout the world."

Summoning Chinese Charge d'Affaires Shen Ping, a Foreign Office official informed him that:

— All Chinese in Britain holding diplomatic or official passports must obtain exit visas from the Foreign Office before leaving Britain.

— All members of the Chinese diplomatic mission are restricted to travel within a radius of five miles from the center of London unless they give 48 hours notice.

— Permission to operate diplomatic radio transmissions by the Chinese mission is suspended until restrictions on the British diplomatic radio in Peking are lifted.

A day-long demonstration by more than 10,000 Red Guards in front of the British mission's office building exploded into violence with the expiration of a Chinese ultimatum demanding that the British release Communist newsmen arrested in the Hong Kong and withdraw action against pro-Communist newspapers.

Military Praise Backs Bombing

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. bombing of North Vietnam is effective and should be continued, Adm. T. H. Moorer, new chief of naval operations, testified today.

"Our air effort against North Vietnam is making a major contribution to the achievement of our objectives in South Vietnam," he said. "Now is certainly not the time to terminate, or decrease in any way, this pressure on the enemy.

Moorer, who took over as top naval officer Aug. 1, testified before a closed session of the Senate defense preparedness investigating subcommittee. Portions of his prepared testimony were released to newsmen.

His testimony backed the stand taken by other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and echoed a theme repeated by other generals and admirals: Bomb more while North Vietnam suffers.

Moorer said effectiveness of the air attacks has been enhanced recently "by the assignment of additional lucrative targets."

He did not elaborate, but U.S. planes have been hitting more often near Hanoi and along the Red Chinese border. This has led to indications the brunt of the attack may be shifting to the heavily defended, politically sensitive northeast quadrant of North Vietnam.

Moorer said the targets in North Vietnam are being hit with "almost surgical precision." Unusual accuracy and controls are needed, he said, to minimize "risk of expanding the war to include Communist China and the Soviet Union."

He said the precision is demonstrated in the destruction of specific bridges and power plants within what under other circumstances would be a military target complex.

The northeast area, which includes the vital railroad link with Communist China's weapons and munitions factories, is regarded as Hanoi's main base area for the war in South Vietnam.

In Saigon Tuesday Air Force spokesmen said the stepped-up attacks in the northeast are severely hurting North Vietnam's capacity for war, and a high-ranking officer declared:

"Hammer, hammer, hammer with everything you can because you know it hurts them. I know they're beaten. The question is: When are they going to quit?"

Meanwhile Gen. John P. McConnell, Air Force chief of staff, told the Senate Preparedness subcommittee examining the bombing campaign: "The cumulative effect of this increasing pressure by air has brought us to the point where we have begun to hurt the enemy in his home territory."

One week ago, Army Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was telling the same group the raids have resulted in "steady destruction of the country's physical infrastructure and deterioration of the national economy."

And on Aug. 9, Adm. Ulysses S. G. Sharp, Pacific commander in chief, testified before the subcommittee: "During the last three months, with an expanded target list but no significant departure from the broad restraints under which we have long operated, we have begun to hurt the enemy in his home territory."

Officers say the latest raids near Hanoi reflect a policy decision to hammer harder at the important northeast sector, which contains key elements of the transportation system, industrial facilities and major military complexes such as training bases.

McConnell traced the evolution of the bombing campaign for senators Tuesday and asserted that without it the United States might have needed an additional 800,000 troops to cope with the Communist buildup.

The four-star general also gave a rare, official picture of what the attacks are doing to North Vietnam as a country, saying its economy "has undergone a decided change."

Due to damaged production and transportation facilities, export tonnage has dropped steadily since air strikes began in 1965, he said.

When Betty Furness was appointed President Lyndon B. Johnson's special assistant for consumer affairs it brightened our day.

To us it meant that an attractive woman would shop regularly for us and represent us in the councils of the mighty.

Every man needs a gal or two like that. There's nothing finer than having one or more attractive women representing the nation's consumers, holding the line on prices as well as keeping the rein on their own shapely figures.

Like the girls in the television adventure series, it has been comforting to know that Betty was right in there with her small spear slaying the inflationary and high cost dragons in the nation's supermarkets.

There were those who scoffed at her appointment, of course.

The debunkers implied that it was all a bit of fluff and that the chief executive had been carried away by our heroine's good looks and winning smile.

It is now our turn to remind these unbelievers that they were wrong. She has set a good example as a shopper.

Not content to just sit in her Washington, D.C., office, she has rolled up her sleeves and gone shopping in the marketplace.

There she found her newest husband -- Leslie G. Midgley, a television news producer.

Yes sir, when Betty discusses consumer problems. She knows what she is talking about. Not a bad looking fellow, either.

Secretary of Defense McNamara, who has been as repressive on the news media as the generals and admirals, has quietly lifted a restriction on the public's right to know which never should have been applied.

Under the regulation information and opinion at the Pentagon was restricted sharply.

The policy was inaugurated during the Cuban missile crisis in 1962.

It required that when Pentagon officials talked with reporters they either must have a monitor present or must file a full report, identify the reporter and the subjects discussed.

This retarded the flow of vital information to the American people although military officials and reporters found ways to circumvent it.

McNamara's memorandum terminating the restriction is interesting:

> "The department of defense has an obligation to guarantee that full and prompt information is made available to the American people on a basis for their understanding of national defense and the operation of this department."

Of course that is true but the explanation makes it appear that McNamara had just become aware of the fact.

The fight to give the American people the information they need to govern intelligently is unending and bureaucrats, such as McNamara, always are tempted to restrain the flow and to "doctor" the output to make it appear more favorable to them.

Second thoughts by a cabinet member may be in some ways desirable and better than none at all but they shouldn't be necessary on a basic principle of good government.

Uruguay, once the "Switzerland of Latin America", has in 15 years gone wild over the welfare state, according to an article in the April issue of Nation's Business magazine. It sent an editor to Uruguay to look over the land which in 15 years has fallen from the ranks of the most affluent and economically sound to the list of Western nations with the most critical ills and found that it is common for government workers to retire on nearly full pay when they are in their mid-40's. Welfare cheating is common. Uruguayans are aware of what is happening in their country and asked the Nation's Business editor, "Is this the way the United States is going, too?"

"Does your company emphasize product development or advertising?"

A top official of a leading wood manufacturer was perplexed when asked this question at a recent convention; his quick reply was:

"It would be useless for us to emphasize produce development without emphasizing advertising. No matter how good they are, we couldn't sell new products without increased advertising."

The more a manufacturer does to improve his line, the larger must be his advertising budget, the executive said. The rule holds from processing to the final retail sales.

Whether the businessman likes it or not, he happens to be operating in an era when change and improvement is expected by the consumer. But it is also the era when the consumer is more skeptical than ever of the claims of the seller.

The consumer wants new and better products. But he is sophisticated enough to know that not all changes are improvements, and that not all new things are better.

Yet, the consumer expects to hear the pitch for change. He considers it the responsibility of the seller to present his case. He is willing to listen; he wants to be convinced that he should invest in a new car, home laundry, television set, vacation trip, or a lake cabin.

But the affluent consumer expects to be courted. In a buyers' market such is his privilege. He expects advertising to sell him. He expects advertising to compete for his money. He trusts his judgment to make a buying decision on the basis of information presented in advertising.

The day of the "steady" consumer is gone -- for whole stores as well as individual products.

How do you compare with professional truck drivers in recognizing highway dangers?

Take the test below and find out. The test represents the opinions of professional truck drivers of the Spector Freight System, Inc., one of the nation's largest trucking firms. These pros ranked each driving error according to how frequently it was seen, its danger, and how likely it was to cause an accident.

You can do the same by rating each error from 1 to 13, using 1 to designate the worst blunder, 2 for the next and so on. But be prepared for some surprises.

. . . Failure to signal correctly.
. . . Speeding (too fast for conditions).
. . . Failure to heed traffic signs and signals.
. . . Tailgating.
. . . Driver unfit (driving while over tired; using alcohol, drugs; not using glasses).
. . . Unsafe or unfamiliar vehicles.
. . . Failure to yield right of way.
. . . Not leaving himself an "out" (an escape route for a potential accident situation seen ahead).
. . . Illegal or unsafe passing or turning.
. . . Not in control of vehicle.
. . . Not staying in proper lane.
. . . Not driving defensively (failure to see and understand possible dangers in time).
. . . Bad driving attitude.

Okay, if you're all done filling in your answers, let's see how the long-haul pros rated these faultes.

Not driving defensively, 1; speeding, 2; driver unfit, 3; bad driving attitude, 4; illegal passing, 5; not leaving an out, 6; failure to yield right of way, 7; not staying in proper lane, 8; failure to heed traffic signs, 9; tailgating, 10; incorrect signaling, 11; not in control of vehicle, 12; and unsafe vehicles, 13.

Some of these results may have surprised you, but don't let any of the nasty 13 catch you napping at the wheel.

NEW YORK (AP) — The statue of Buddha in the Waldorf Towers apartment looked unreal. Half-hiding the placid timeless face was a large blonde wig, tilted askew.

"I'm waiting for the hairdresser to come and fix it," said Carol Channing.

Rare indeed is the actress who creates one unforgettable role in the theater. Carol did it twice, scoring as Lorelei Lee in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" in 1949 and as Dolly Gallagher Levi in "Hello, Dolly!" in 1963.

Miss Channing made musical comedy history by bringing in $17,015,018 in 1,272 consecutive performances of "Dolly" on Broadway and on the road. It was a personal triumph for her as well as a financial triumph for producer David Merrick.

So when Hollywood decided to film the musical, whom did the title role go to? To Barbra Streisand.

The choice was a heavy blow to Carol, but she's too good a trouper to be bitter about it.

"Naturally, I was disappointed," she said. "But Barbra and I were always good friends. She's a creative person, and will do the role in her own way.

"It doesn't hurt me anymore. But I certainly did want to jump out the window at first."

But Carol has no immediate leisure for such nonproductive activities as defenestration.

She has six hour-long spectaculars to make for the ABC network. There are also two more films to do for producer Ross Hunter, for whom she costarred with Julie Andrews in "Thoroughly Modern Miller," another box-office hit.

Then, in 1970, she has a commitment to appear in another Broadway musical planned by Merrick. "No, I don't mind having my life planned so far ahead," said Carol.

"I like it. It's every actor's ambition to keep working. The busier anyone is the happier he is, and the more fun to be around.

"The only unhappy people are those who don't work, either because they don't have to or because they are bums."

This gal who has been called "the blitz blonde with the clown-doll eyes" has the air of a hoydenish kitten on stage. Off stage, she is just as warm and friendly, but her comic, flighty mannerisms are underlaid by a vein of seriousness. She is a wise as well as funny kitten.

She worked as a model, receptionist, and sales girl before achieving success. Today she values that success, and she values the happy family relationship she has with her husband and manager, Charles Franklin Lowe, and her son, Channing.

To her happiness consists "in keeping busy at the thing you are built to do.

"I believe you should find something to dedicate your life to— and then dedicate it, go all the way with it."

These are her likes:

"Bicycling in Central Park with my husband and son— vivid colors such as chrome yellows, bright reds and strong magentas— working with Julie Andrews— rainy weather— Monday night audiences, because they're always the best— cooking omelettes with my son— wearing massive pieces of novelty jewelry— the writings of Thornton Wilder -- any music with lyrics— swimming in the Pacific Ocean early in the morning— and painting portraits of people from the neck up with 10-cent pastel paints."

And these are her dislikes:

"Music without lyrics— getting stuck in elevators— alcoholic actors, because they can ruin your performance as well as their own— Saturday night audiences— and people who don't work at anything, and are therefore mean and resentful."

What does she think are her own worst faults?

"Being late to appointments, and dribbling food when I eat. Really, I should always wear an apron to the table."

A farmer fell and broke his hip while he was plowing and his horse galloped 5 miles to the nearest town and returned carrying a doctor on his back.

"Pretty smart horse," a friend observed later.

"Well, not really so smart," the farmer said. "The doctor he brought back was a horse doctor."

Students of foreign folkways may be interested in this intriguing ad from the "Help Wanted" section of the Otago Daily Times of Dunedin, New Zealand: "Wanted For West Otago Stud Sheep Farm - One single man or youth. Must be interested in sheep. Phone Tapaunui or Heroit in the evening."

BEWARE OF REGIMENTING PARAPHERNALIA

Vice President Humphrey told a gathering of farmers, short while ago, that: "Today the age of surpluses is all but gone. Next year will be a year for bringing a substantial part of our reserve acreage out of mothballs. The farmers of this nation will be called upon to expand production. This is . . . good news for our farmers, for our consumers, and for hungry people throughout the world."

Before coming to sanguine about future production miracles that will be expected of American agriculture, it should be remembered that the productivity of agriculture in the United States, just as in all other lines of endeavor, has rested upon adherence to the free market, private enterprise system. As inflation progresses, there is talk of wage and price controls and all the other paraphernalia of regimented systems that have brought starvation and ruin to other nations. It does not take a very long memory to recall the disruptions in supply and demand, the black markets, and the scarcities that were the consequence of previous attempts to impose police state type regulations on the American economy.

Wage and price controls are no remedy for inflation. They are a guarantee of scarcity.

ON RESISTING INFLATION

We have every sympathy for housewives who want lower food prices. However, we have a sneaking hunch that a little investigation would turn up some inconsistencies.

For instance, if you were to follow the picketing Mrs. Brown home you'd probably find her being met at the door by her seven-year-old Wilbur with the following utlimatum:

"Mommy, I just saw on television a Super Z-Ray Cannon that shoots genuine atomic warheads and it costs only $24.95. Will you buy me one, Mommy? It's only $24.95."

At the home of Mrs. Smith, the one who carried the sign demanding a cut in meat prices, there'd be a different demand, this from five-year-old Sissty: "I have been watchin' Uncle Zuk on the television and you know what? For only $39.95 you can buy me a Genuine Hollywood Screen Test Kit Including Hair Dye. And I want one."

Mrs. Jones, the lady who denounced high food prices for the reporters, on camera, is silent at dinner because Junior has the floor. Seems he has been looking at cars. He can get a Caramba, with bucket seats, four-on-the-floor, tachometer, stereo tape system and 440 inches of power, all for only $3,495 delivered. Or he can get a Palomino similarly equipped for only $3,695.

Since today's moppets get what they go after, there's a good chance that Wilbur, Sissy and Junior will end up with these things, and meanwhile, their mamas will do their utmost to stop inflation in food prices.

Maybe the men who run the groceries and supermarkets ought to make some changes in their advertising copy. We might suggest:

Super-steaks for Sizzling, only $2.98 a portion.

Milk With Built-in Glamor, only $1.89 a fifth.

All the Vegetables Your Family Can Eat in 1967, only $1,995.

Obviously nothing can be high-priced if it costs only a certain amount. And obviously nothing can be inflationary if it's priced at only so many dollars.

That's the only way of looking at it.

Three young boys were playing in the street of a London slum. A Rolls Royce stopped and a beautiful, expensively dressed blonde stepped out. She crossed over to the boys, picked up the youngest, hugged him and left a box of candies, and filled his hands with money. Waving goodbye, she re-entered the car and departed. The other boys were goggle-eyed.

One said, "Blimey, Jackie, was that yer fairy godmother?"

Jackie looked at him with scorn and replied, "Naw, that wuz my sister wot was ruined."

"Well," said the life-guard, "kids will be kids."

"Yes, but from the high diving board?" she asked.

H. L. Hunt Says

If members of Congress and state legislatures should abolish the Electoral College with the direct vote plan of electing the President of the United States, they would be showing little veneration for the Founders of Freedom. These astute and far-seeing patriots, after many weeks of deliberation, debate and voting, wrote a Constitution which nurtured Republic USA, the greatest nation ever on earth.

The Congressional District Plan for reform of the Electoral College system will help guarantee and perpetuate what the Founders sought to achieve. The direct vote plan popularized with catch phrases would go a long way toward destroying their creation, in which they appear to the greatest students of government to have been "guided by Divine Providence." The U. S. Constitution was appraised by Gladstone a hundred years later as the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

Substitution of the Electoral College system with the direct vote would be abandonment of a fundamental tenet the authors of the Constitutions relied upon to establish our Nation as a Republic. Reform of our historic Electoral College system in an orderly manner, on the other hand, would win a resounding testimonial from the free world and even from communist nations to the workability of government within the framework of our Republic.

The direct vote would lead to a bigger, more powerful central government. The wise words of George Washington apply: "Government, like fire, is a dangerous servant and a fearful master." The Electoral College system is sound; it needs only to be wisely reformed. HLH.

WASHINGTON -- Following up his call for guerrilla warfare in the United States, Cuban dictator Fidel Castro is preparing to sneak a Negro revolutionary into the United States to direct the guerrilla movement.

An intelligence report identifies him as Robert Williams, who already has contacts among Negro extremists. It was Williams reportedly who arranged for Stokely Carmichael to go to Cuba.

Williams presumably will attempt to recruit other Negroes, who will be sent to Cuba by the same underground route -- VIA prague -- for guerrilla training.

Already Williams has smuggled thousands of incendiary leaflets into the United States, exhorting Negroes to take up weapons against the whites and giving do-it-yourself instructions in sabotage.

A former U.S. marine, Robert Williams became a Negro hero of sorts after he organized armed resistance to a Ku Klux Klan drive into the colored section of Monroe, N.C. He threw up a sandbag barricade, positioned his followers behind it, and ordered them to fire on the approaching Klansmen.

With a great flapping of white sheets, the Klansmen, though armed themselves, fled in panic. They prefer to terrorize defenseless Negroes.

During a subsequent race riot, Williams held a white couple in his home. He was charged with kidnapping, and escaped to Havana in August 1961, just a jump ahead of the FBI.

He has been shuttling between Havana and Peking ever since. The intelligence report claims he is now on his way back from China to head up Castro's U.S.-bound guerrillas.

CARDINAL TALKS POLITICS

Boston's colorful Richard Cardinal Cushing, the intimate friend and spiritual adviser to the Kennedy clan, has predicted privately that Sen. Robert Kennedy, D-N.Y., will never make it to the White House.

The difference between the late Jack Kennedy's successful campaign and Bobby Kennedy's prospects, the Cardinal explained to friends, is the illness of their father. Without old Joe Kennedy pulling wires in the back room, the Cardinal suggested, Bobby won't win the Presidency.

The prelate jovially recalled how he and old Joe, both hard-shell Catholics, made strategic contributions to protestant ministers in West Virginia to help win friends and influence voters for Jack Kennedy in the crucial 1960 West Virginia primary.

"We donated $200 to some, $500 to others -- and a few got $1,000 -- depending upon the size of their congregations," confessed the Cardinals, chuckling merrily.

TALCOTT AND TEAGUE

The plight of the migrant workers has been getting attention in the press lately, but it has received little attention from congress.

The powerful California and Texas delegations, with few exceptions, are lined up on the side of the big ranchers against their underpaid stoop laborers.

Two of the most vociferous champions of the ranchers are congressmen Burt Talcott and Charles Teague, both Republicans, who represent adjoining California districts. Teague's family owns Limoneira ranch, the world's largest lemon producer. Although Talcott is not himself a rancher, his law firm represents the packing and processing houses that do business with the ranchers.

Talcott and Teague have always stood together in the house, opposing curbs on the admission of cheap Mexican labor, favoring legislation that benefits the ranchers, crying out in angry duet against any infringement upon the feudal rule of the big ranch owners.

DOUGLAS DOUBLE-CROSSED

In a chat within this column, white-thatched Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas confirmed that he had been euchered out of the vice presidential nomination at the 1944 Democratic Convention. The nomination went instead to Harry S. Truman, who succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt a year later as President.

Douglas was told by Grace Tully, FDR's private secretary, that President Roosevelt had dictated a letter to the Chicago convention, saying he would accept either Douglas or Truman as his running mate. She said that Douglas's name had been listed first.

But Bob Hannegan, then Democratic national chairman, wanted Truman. Hannegan intercepted Roosevelt's letter and retyped it for release with Truman's name first. Thus the press and public got the idea that Truman was FDR's favorite, and the convention carried out history.

At a subsequent cocktail party, Douglas recalled, a beaming Hannegan came up to him.

"I guess we boxed you in," he said amiably.

"If I ever need a campaign manager," replied Douglas with equal good humor, "I'll call on you."

The recollection of how close he came to the Presidency, however, "has ground at Douglas all these years," says a friend. The rugged old jurist has hungered for the chance the Presidency would have given him possibly to maintain the historic Chinese - American friendship, thus averting the Korean and Vietnam wars.

He was in touch with Red Chinese leaders who persuaded him that they had no desire to be dominated by Russia. He always felt that China and Russia, facing each other across the world's longest border, inevitably would clash. He remains convinced that timely and friendly recognition of Red China would have kept the Chinese neutral and would have avoided two decades of crises in Asia.

Justice Douglas still hangs on to the hope that, somehow the pieces of the old Chinese - American friendship can be picked up. He obtained state department approval last year for a visit behind the Bamboo Curtain, but the Chinese never responded to his travel request. Earlier this year, despite the convulsion in China, he renewed his application.

Dirksen, Fighting For Constitutional Convention, Asks 'Whose Govt. Is This Anyway?'

If ever the word gladiator befitted anyone, it does justice and full flavor to Everett Dirksen. He fights eloquently. Yet he is tough. But during the toughest of his battles, on the labor front for example, I have seen him and powerful labor leaders talk to each other with animated respect.

In recent years he has campaigned against labor's increasing influence, and for an educational system in which students and educators could join in prayer if they wished. Now he feels strongly about the "one man, one vote" issue. I asked him why. Here is his reply:

By Everett Dirksen
U.S. Senator from Illinois

Washington, D.C.—The Preamble to the Constitution of the United States begins with the words: "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union" and for other purposes, "do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America." I wonder whether we can still honestly say, "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union"?

In 1964 the United States Supreme Court handed down its decision in the case of Reynolds vs. Simms. It dealt with the composition and apportionment of state legislatures. The decision was promptly tagged as "the one-man, one-vote" rule. Strangely enough the real significance of the decision became somewhat sidetracked.

The real issue was and is whether under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution states can be deprived of the power and the right to determine the composition of at least one branch of its legislature so that fair representation is provided to all area political subdivisions and interests in the state.

This court decision says in effect that, notwithstanding the provisions of the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution which reserves to the states and to the people the powers not expressly delegated by the federal government, the states must and shall comply with the clause in the Fourteenth Amendment which assures equal protection of the laws, and that in respect to apportionment of state legislatures this means that the basis for apportionment must be population and population alone.

One effect of the high court decision is that the one-man, one-vote principle is now sought to be applied to political subdivisions of the states. That is to say, that it should be applied to county boards, school boards, park boards and other elective bodies without regard to the many diverse factors which must be considered to achieve the objective of fair representation.

The mischief inherent in the court decision is bound to go on and on and sooner or later it must have attention by the Congress and the people.

A resolution providing a constitutional amendment to deal with this problem was submitted to the United States Senate and voted upon on April 20, 1966, and commanded a substantial majority of the votes of the Senate. In fact, the vote was 55 to 38. This, however, failed short by seven votes of the required two-thirds of the Senators who might be present and voting.

While the attempt to obtain Congressional approval of a constitutional amendment was underway, a parallel endeavor to have the necessary states petition the Congress for a Constitutional Convention for the purpose of submitting such an amendment was also underway. In fact, 32 of the necessary 34 states have already filed such applications. This right of the states to require the convening of a convention for the purpose of submitting amendments to the Constitution is guaranteed by Article V. This effort came under immediate attack.

In large part the arguments advanced against calling a constitutional convention were rather stuffy and invalid. It was said that it had never been done! As if there is no first for everything. It was said that it would open up a Pandora's box that would let out all of the Trojan horses. The very mixture of the metaphor indicates the bewilderment of the spokesman. It was said that it could wreck the Constitution. To that one might reply by saying that so could the court.

Every fantastic contention has been dreamed up to fortify the argument that the people cannot be entrusted with their own business. The very purpose of the second part of Article V of the Constitution was to assure the people that if a hostile Congress refused to submit amendments to the states, the people through their legislatures could petition Congress to do so and it was made mandatory. The Article states that the Congress "shall" call a convention on petition of the necessary number of states.

Alexander Hamilton, one of the framers, gave particular attention to this Article and pointed out that it was "peremptory" and that it left no discretion in the Congress with respect to calling a convention.

Whose government is this anyway? If it is not the government of, for, and by people, it is one of the single phenomena of our public life that candidates supplicate the people for their votes and, when elected to office, all too often promptly manifest an eloquent distruct of the people. Whenever the time comes that the people cannot be trusted with their own affairs it will be time to fold up the Republic and give the key back to the Indians.

The very people who framed the Constitution had no such timidity about going back to the people. The Constitution was ratified by the required number of states on July 2, 1788, within 11 months of its ratification 10 amendments were proposed, and within 26 months these were ratified and became a part of the Constitution. These were known as the Bill of Rights. What a lesson this should be to any self-appointed defenders of the faith who really have no faith in the people.

Twenty - five times the Constitution has been amended. These amendments include the Bill of Rights, the abolition of slavery, votes for women, prohibition, the repeal of prohibition, presidential succession, the poll tax and others.

When one watches the march of federalism, whether by court decree or executive ukase, one becomes acutely aware that the effort for a more perfect union has been stalemated and that retrogression has set in. If this trend continues, state lines will fade only to be recorded in the dusty files of Rand McNally. It is high time to find out from the people whether they approve of these encroachments on their powers. The most satisfactory way to ascertain the peoples' will is through a constitutional convention. We can then determine whether we can still honestly say: "We the people of the United States in order to form a more perfect Union. . . do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

The Rev. Vernon C. Taylor of Louisville officiated at the ceremony.

No male beauty contest has ever been recorded, but for more than two centuries Englishmen could--and did--compete in male ugliness contests. These "grinning matches," as they were called, enlivened country fairs and city holiday celebrations. Grinning meant grimacing, and a match was actually a contest in making faces. For added effect, contestants stuck their head through a horse collar. The prize was often a gold-or silver-laced hat, or other equally valuable trophy. In 1711 an important horse-race meeting advertised "a Gold Ring to be Grinn'd for" as an extra attraction. The nation's leading essayist, Joseph Addison, thereupon grew solemn about the whole idea. It was, he wrote, "an affront to the human species to treat in this manner the Human Face Divine." The grinning match nevertheless went right on being popular at English folk frolics until well into the current century, becoming extinct, by coincidence, just when the horse collar was vanishing from modern civilization.

HEADS WE LOSE

" 'Tis a far, far bettaire zing I do
Zan I have done before,"
Says Pierre Pan, mad cameraman,
And swings his boom much lower.

The special blade, his own brainchild.
Looms out his camera's brow--
A horizontal guillotine
On its fell swoop enow.

Pierre just pans the panel twice
(Once extra for the viewer):
Four panel members' torsos sit
Four clever heads the fewer!

And folk at sets throughout the land
Look grim and drink and sup
While waiting for that nut Pierre
To pull his picture up.

Midnight: I wake from slumber deep
To jot down gems that will not keep,
Quite sure the world I will astound
With words of wisdom so profound
Folks will be chomping at the bit
For more of such wondrous wit.
Dawn: I peruse the muse, survey the muss--
For this mess I missed Morpheus?

One Christmas I visited a friend who has eight children. As we picked our way through the cluttered living room he said, "To many people certain sounds are synbolic of Christmas -- the tinkle of bells, carol singing, the shouts of happy children. To me it's the unceasing crunch, crunch, crunch of plastic toys."

City Welcomes Home Champs

By DAN SPEARS

What's home? . . . It was something to be proud of and to get back to for 18 happy and proud young athletes last night.

These athletes, the 1967 Sikeston Potlatch Foresters, were infected with happiness on their arrival at Moores Warehouse, east of town on highway 61.

Cars honked, bells rang, police sirens roared, and tears flew as they stepped off their chartered Greyhound bus. Loaded into convertibles, a 50 car motorcade proceeded west on Highway 61, through downtown streets and back to the VFW stadium, where the high school band struck up the "Washington Lee Swing," better known around SHS as "There's a Sikeston Boy," while the team was escorted on to the field in cars.

"Team members and coaches, welcome home. On behalf of everyone, we are proud of you." These were the first words of congratulations spoken as City Manager, W. Raymert Miller, praised the boys for a job well done.

Bill Porter, manager of Potlatch Forest Inc., complimented the squad by saying that if he could send a group of men across the United States to represent Sikeston, this is the type he would want to send.

The team won the Black River league, state, midwest and Southern Plains regional titles before losing two games in the Little World Series at Farmington, N. M., to Bridgeport, Conn., and Long Beach, Calif., with a single victory over Nashville.

The boys did not return to Sikeston after winning the regional at Lamar, Colo.

The coach and taskmaster of the team, N. P. McDaniel, stepped to the microphone last night and coolly and calmly commented: "It's a pleasure to be home. Whatever we did, it was entirely a team effort. We appreciated the telegrams and support from back home and were proud to represent you."

McDaniels introduced each team member and accepted comments from any of them. Wayne Limbaugh said:

"It was great coaching all the way through."

Mike Garner voiced: "It is good to be home to football."

Ed Felker announced: "When we got to the World Series in Farmington, the people were nice but none of them compared to Sikeston."

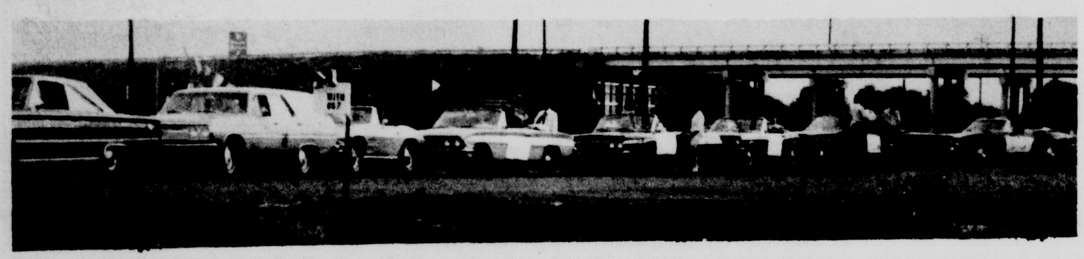
Terry Brown said: "I just hope we can do it again next year."

Before turning the microphone back to the KMPL Radio master of ceremonies, McDaniels said that the officials of the Connie Mack Tournament in Colorado said that they would like to hold the regional tournament here next year if the city of Sikeston wanted it.

Together with a standing ovation a simultaneous shout from the crowd roared:

"We do."

"WELCOME HOME" was the response from the crowd as the Southern Plains regional champions Connie Mack baseball team unloaded from their bus last night at Moores Warehouse, east of town on Highway 61.



THE BEGINNING of the 50 car motorcade awaits the return of the Sikeston Potlatch Foresters. The eight convertibles in the foreground transported the team through the downtown streets and onto the field at VFW stadium.

Cards Halt Game Skid With 9-0 Win

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

St. Louis has been cashing in on last year's Orlando Cepeda-Ray Sadecki swap for a long while, but Cepeda still won't let the San Francisco Giants off the hook.

The slugging first baseman tagged Sadecki for a run-scoring single and a three-run homer Tuesday night, backing Nelson Briles' four-hit pitching and powering the National League-leading Cardinals to a 9-0 romp over the Giants.

Cepeda, dealt from San Francisco to the Cards in May, 1966, for southpaw Sadecki, went 3-for-5 against the Giants and boosted his batting mark to .344 — only two points short of league leader Roberto Clemente of Pittsburgh.

Sadecki, meanwhile, lasted 4 1-3 innings, committed an error, wild-pitched two runs home and wound up with his fifth loss in 10 decisions.

In other NL action Philadelphia swept a doubleheader from the New York Mets 2-0 and 11-4; Cincinnati trimmed Los Angeles 4-1; Chicago drubbed Pittsburgh 8-1 and Houston spanked Atlanta 4-1.

The Cardinals, who had dropped two in a row, jumped on Sadecki for three runs in the first inning and finished him in the fifth on Julian Javier's single, the pitcher's fielding error and Cepeda's 22nd homer.

Javier, who also had three hits, clubbed a three-run homer off reliever Bob Bolin in the sixth and ex-relief pitcher Briles breezed to his first shutout and eighth victory in 13 decisions.

Larry Jackson, beaten by the Mets last week after reeling off 18 straight victories at their expense, started a new string in the nightcap at New York as Rich Allen paced a 14-hit assault with his 22nd and 23rd homers.

Rick Wise blanked the Mets on seven hits in the first game while Bill White's RBI single in the fourth and Tony Gonzalez' ninth inning homer won it for the Phillies.

Milt Pappas, who had shut out Los Angeles in two previous meetings, blanked them on six hits until Al Ferrara homered in the ninth and picked up his 13th victory against eight losses. Pete Rose keyed the Reds' attack against loser Don Drysdale with a double and run-scoring triple.

Joe Niekro scattered 11 Pittsburgh hits and doubled in three runs to lead the Cubs past the Pirates and left-hander Bob Veale. Billy Williams hit his 19th homer as the Cubs snapped Pittsburgh's winning streak at five games.

The Astros stretched Atlanta's losing string to five behind the six-hit pitching of Dave Giusti. Singles by Joe Morgan, Bob Aspromonte and Ron Brand plus an infield out produced two runs in the second inning, propelling Houston to its third straight victory.

Connie Mack Finals Thurs.

FARMINGTON, N. M. (AP)— Through luck of the draw, Portland, Ore., has a spot in the finals of the Connie Mack baseball world series while Flint, Mich., and Long Beach, Calif., have to battle each other to stay in the meet.

Each of the three teams ended Tuesday's play with one loss as host Farmington dropped out with a 5-2 loss to Portland.

The draw gave Portland a bye into the finals and a day of rest today while Flint and Long Okach play tonight.

The championship game will be Thursday.

Johnson In Army Green

FT. SILL, Okla. (AP) — Charley Johnson, who a season ago was piloting the St. Louis Cardinals at quarterback, was an Army man toda as he began two years' active duty as a first lieutenant.

Johnson arrived at this artillery-missile center early Tuesday afternoon to begin a nine-week field artillery officer basic course.

Johnson will then go to the Langley Research Center, Hampton, Va., where he'll work with the Army element with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The 28-year-old Cards' star is an Army reserve officer called to active duty.

Johnson was injured last season after guiding the Cardinals to a 6-1 won-lost record. They finished 8-5-1 in the National Football League.

Johnson said he would know within a few days if he would be able to play intraservice football, but he said chances were good that he would.

Coffee Corner
by Cherie

I recently attended a large social function where the gentlemen were out en masse, and I was informed by a goodly number of these manly forms that what my column really lacked to make it first rate was sex! After trying to laugh this suggestion off only to have it hurled challengingly at me again and again, I got my Irish up and told the old duffers I'd just devote the column this week to that subject. So you agiatators--if this column today is short, nearsighted, and rather pitiful, it's because you picked the material--not I!! Sex--pause, and I won't say a pregnant pause as it would be just too obvious --you know I'd really be much safer writing about the extinction of the Maya Indian in South America, and probably much more informative, too, at least, I read a book on the Indians that I could understand. Don't you just love all these pre-marriage manuals they put out on this delicate subject? I tried reading one once, and not being anything but a very stupid layman with no knowledge of medical terminology, I was never very sure when they started spouting those lengthy terms such as bronchus, phalanges, ureters, and etc., which end was even under discussion; much less how to go about getting acquainted. Speaking of agiatators, Charles just wanted to know what I was writing about this week and when I told him he (after a period of time taken up with convulsive laughter), told me with my limited knowledge to forget it as I wouldn't even be able to complete the first paragraph, much less fill a whole column. Now how is that for faith and encouragement from your helpmate? That Charles, he wants a good cook, neat housekeeper, marvelous laundress, and Gipsy Rose Lee all wrapped up in one package, and if the silly goose had that it would kill him in a week just trying to keep all the other envious husbands away from his door.

He'd better learn how to be content with a fairly decent cook, a good picker upper around the house, to keep his clothes clean but not so hot on the ironing, and at least I had Lee for a maiden name, (the Gypsy Rose strain must have petered out before my time). Well, back to sex, which is after all what this column is supposed to be about. That is the one thing about these movies and best-sellers that is such a scream to me. I mean I'm plenty gullible and lots of things are believable to me, like men on Mars in flying saucers, and dogs that talk, little things like that, but this constant parade of bedroom scenes amid suburbia that they show in the flicks and novels is the most unbelievable thing I've ever heard of. Now I appeal to you as a modern housewife, just when are you going to sandwich in a tryst with the plumber, the grocer or the milkman, (much less the neighbor next door), all in the same day and with all the work to be done that there is. In the first place, to get the plumber to your house is an accomplishment that totally drains you of any extra energy you might have, and you can bet your bottom boots when he finally does arrive he is pushed straight to either the stopped up garbage disposal or the stopped up commode, (depending on which room the kids have been playing in). Then when he's finished fixing that and hands over the bill, why, with what plumbers charge nowadays, any gal would be a fool to tip him anything extra. Second, the grocer always manages to arrive with your frozen T. V. dinners just 15 minutes before time to eat, and since they take a half hour to thaw and cook, who has time for him? Third, the milkman comes at six in the morning and husbands are usually still sleeping at your side, and if not who in heaven's name is amorous at six in the morning before their teeth are brushed? My neighbors only visit with their wives along--so there you are. However, the real stumbling block to me is the housewife herself, after sewing, sweeping, disting, washing and ironing all day whos got any energy left for any extra curricular activities, and what do you do with the kids, lock them in the clothes hamper?

Well readers, I've at least accomplished two things with today's column. I'll bet this will be the last time you'll insist on me writing on a certain subject, and best of all I showed old Charles I could get past the first paragraph!

FRUITS AND ROOTS

Many of us would love to have sin taken away. Who loves to have a hasty temper? Who loves to have a proud disposition? Who loves to have a worldly heart? No one. You ask Christ to take it away, and He does not do it? It is because you want Him to take away the ugly fruits while the poisonous roots remain in you. You do not ask that henceforth you might give up self entirely to the power of His Spirit.

Do you suppose that a painter would want to work out a beautiful picture on a canvas which does not belong to him? No. Yet people want Jesus Christ to take away this temper or that other sin while as yet they have not yielded themselves utterly to His command.

Beyond the fence, where winter-purple grapes
Forlornly cluster on an ermine veine,
Wind-flurried snow whirls swiftly, selltes, shapes
Long rows of drifts in shadowy design.
On ridge and hillside, bushes crouch, white-furred.
Bare branches crackle, and sere brown leaves flow
Only by fox feet moccasined with snow.

The wildest boat ride in America flushed thrill seekers of the 1870's down an unusual Nevada watercourse. It was all wood and a yard wide--and 15 miles long. The V flume, so named for its cross-sectional form, had been invented to float Sierra timber from forest to mines. Its sides were two-foot-broad planks, joined edgewise at a right angle, and it was supported on trestlework five to 70 feet high over hill and dale in a winding route, descending always at least one foot in 40 and in places as steeply as one in two. Water released from a mountain lake sluiced heavy timbers down the flume in a rumbling rush. Inevitably somebody tried riding the surge. A one-trip "boat" -- a plain V-bottomed trough fitting inside the flume--was knocked together. The ride proved to be a terror...and for hardy and privileged souls thenceforth, a test of courage. In 1877 a visiting New York dignitary recorded his experience. He rode with two Nevada silver magnates who enjoyed quarter ownerships in a $100-million mine. Crouched in a 30-inch-wide floating trough, he was breathlessly flung around curves, catapulted across ravines, hurled down steep slopes and generally wrenched and drenched. Each multi-millionaire vowed he wouldn't make the voyage again for his entire mine. The New Yorker noted that the 15-mile trip took only 35 minutes. As a free-drifting boat speed record, the 25 mph.

Report From Washington

Paul C. Jones

After reducing overall economic and military aid to other countries from a requested $3.4 billion to $2.6 billion, the Senate approved the Foreign Assistance Act of 1967.

This reduction came on the recommendation of the Foreign Relations Committee, of which I am a member. In its report on the bill, the Committee stated:

"Belt tightening because of the war (in Vietnam) must not be restricted to domestic programs but should include our foreign aid programs as well. American citizens should not be called upon to accept reductions in programs which affect their daily lives, see their taxes increased and war costs spiral, while the foreign aid program escapes unaffected and undiminished."

Under an amendment which I sponsored, economic assistance would be denied to any country diverting its resources to military expenditures to such an extent that it interferes with economic development or increases the danger of a regional arms race.

The Senate also sustained the Committee in eliminating the $384 million revolving fund in the Department of Defense that has been utilized to finance the sale of arms to various underveloped countries: I supported the reduction of authorized funds for the program, but voted against passage of the bill in the belief that for many reasons, including fiscal and monetary ones, it would be well to suspend these programs because of the many requirements of the Treasury, not only because of the unfortunate war in Vietnam, but also because of the many badly needed domestic programs.

RECREATION FEES EXPLAINED

In a three-page letter, the Army Corps of Engineers has given us its reasons for charging fees to owners of private docks and other facilities on recreation areas under their jurisdiction. The example used is Table Rock Reservoir, but the policy is nationwide.

The House Public Works Committee plans hearings on bills that would prohibit these fees as well as entrance fees at Federal recreation areas. The questions raised have also been presented to the Senate Public Works Committee.

Among other factors, the Corps explained its belief that an inequity would exist in permitting land owners adjacent to these recreation areas the right to build private docks without charge at the same time non-residents have to pay for similar privileges through commercial concessions and organized, private boat clubs which in turn are required to pay fees based on use and privileges granted.

Copies of this policy letter are available from my office upon request.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS

The Senate Finance Committee begins hearings this week on the Social Security Amendments of 1967. The House has approved a bill which would increase by 12.5 percent the Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance benefits for persons already on the rolls and raise the minimum monthly payment from $44 to $50.

Other provisions of the House-passed measure include:

Changes in the Health Insurance program would extend the hospital care period from 90 to 120 days and provide an alternative plan of payment. Also, Social Security recipients would be allowed to earn up to $1680 a year without loss of payments. The present law allows earnings up to $1500.

Reforms also would be made in the Medical Assistance program, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Child Welfare and Health programs.

The cost of the increased benefits would be met by increases in the Social Security payroll tax as well as raising the amount of earnings subject to the tax from $6600 to $7600.

Got a problem kitchen -- poorly planned -- space going to waste? If you do, the answer is remodeling, says the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau.

Kitchens have come a long way since the turn of the century. Long gone is the plain, lifeless room with the wood-enclosed sink, hand pump or single faucet and coal-burning range. Modern kitchens, by contrast, have lost the bare look, and gained many work-saving advancements.

According to the Bureau, a new kitchen should be planned in terms of three work centers -- (1) the sink area for meal preparation and cleanup; (2) the range area for cooking and serving; (3) the refrigerator area for storage and mixing.

There are four general floor plans used for kitchens today -- L-shaped, U-shaped, one-wall and corridor. Since the homemaker spends most of her kitchen time at the sink, the selection of that fixture should be given careful consideration. A double or new triple-bowl sink with drainboards provides the ultimate in convenience.

Sinks come in the same lustrous shades as other plumbing fixtures --pink, blue, green, gray, yellow, suntan and ivory. They are also available in the increasingly popular stainless steel. With the wide choice the homeowner has today, it is easy to plan an attractive, color-coordinated kitchen, with the sink as the starting point.

Among the popular features of modern sinks are the single control faucet, swivel spout, strainer draines, hose sprays and built-in soap dispensers. The finish of sink fittings is chrome, assuring a lifetime of mirror-bright sparkle.

In addition to the new sink, you will want to consider some of the other time and work-savers available for the kitchen today. Two of the best items ever developed for the housewife are the automatic dishwasher and food waste disposer. Together, they save hours of unpleasant work every day and improve sanitation, as well.

The man in the seat next to me on a Boston-New York flight had that unmistakably sound and salubrious look of a proper Bostonian. We introduced ourselves. He was a distinguished Harvard graduate, in middle life, engaged in running a large investment trust, bearing one of the best Boston names, active in the life of Harvard. He was reading a Boston Herald. I had a New York Times, which, having read, I offered to him. He hesitated. "Thank you," he said, "but I think I'll stick to the Herald. If I read the Times, I get sort of mixed up."

Can that dainty, graceful girl
Be really mine? I muse
As the curtains part and out she whirls.
In the footlights' rainbow hues.
Where is that tomboy girl I knew,
(With surely two left feet?)
This one taps lightly right on cue
She doesn't miss a beat.
The first recital has me guessing,
(Such a very important event,)
But the thought is there and keeps persisting--
I wonder where my Audrey went!

Couey Joins Cape College

COLUMBIA -- The modern university observed Clark Kerr, the former president of the University of California's nine-campus system, is a multiversity. Its faculties are engaged in so many different kinds of tasks that it has become difficult to identify a single common function performed by all faculty members.

That large state universities are considerably more than centers of classroom teaching is nothing new. For the Morrill Act of 1862, which created the land-grant universities, envisioned wide-ranging activities for government-supported universities. The land grant schools, from their inception, were to engage in teaching, research, and public service.

Nowhere was this more evident than in the agricultural extension programs of the universities. Funded heavily by the federal government, the land-grant university's extension programs brought all three functions directly to the people through centers in every county. But the public, corporate industry, labor, and government soon began to rely on the universities for teaching, research, and consultation in areas besides agriculture. Thus, the universities grew into complicated organizations populated by students, teachers, researchers, consultants, and administrators.

In many respects, the University of Missouri has experienced a similar growth. Its extra-teaching functions have long ago moved from a concentration on agriculture to virtually every field of human learning.

But how do the people of Missouri presently view the University? Is it a teaching center alone? Do they see it performing the many activities envisioned by the land-grant act? Is it a multiversity?

To shed light on these questions the Public Opinion Survey Unit of the University of Missouri asked its statewide sample of nearly 1,000 people in the summer of 1966: "Besides teaching its students, do you think the University of Missouri does anything for the rest of the people in the state of Missouri? What do you have in mind?" A few years ago, the Survey Research Center of the University of Michigan asked a similar question of Michigan residents; the Michigan question, of course, referred both to Michigan State (the land-grant school) and the University of Michigan. The results provide interesting comparisons.

In Missouri, fully 41 per cent of the respondents stated that they didn't know of anything the University of Missouri did besides teaching, or else said that the University did nothing in addition to teaching students. Another 10 per cent believed the University did other things but couldn't say what. The remaining 49 per cent were able to name one or more specific functions besides teaching that the University performs.

In Michigan, by contrast, only 28 per cent of the respondents either though the universities did only teaching or else could not name additional functions. The great majority, 72 per cent, were able to list some of the other functions. Thus, even though the universities in the two states are involved in virtually the same extra-teaching programs, Michigan residents were much more likely than Missouri residents to view their universities as multi-versities.

There are also very pronounced differences in the kinds of functions beyond teaching listed by the Missouri and Michigan respondents. The table below presents those respondents mentioning a specific function performed by the respective state universities.

The most striking difference relates to agriculture. Insofar as Missourians feel that the University engages in activities beyond teaching, nearly half of them are likely to mention agricultural research, experimentation, and consultation. As one farmer put it, "When my hogs got that disease, I just called the University extension and they told me what to do." Or, as a suburban housewife observed, "I couldn't grow flowers in this soil so I wrote the University and found out how to fertilize it and improve it." Only 15 per cent of the Michigan respondents mentioned agriculturally-related services. Roughly equal numbers cited their universities' hospital facilities and medical research activities.

On the other hand, far more Michigan residents mentioned such functions as adult education through the extension, basic and applied research in fields besides medicine or agriculture, training of community leaders, cultural activities, educational reports, and work in developing nations.

Thus, to a majority of Missourians the University of Missouri is primarily and almost exclusively a teaching center. When it does become involved in research or public service, they feel it is still usually in fields related to agriculture. The public image has not yet changed to accord with actual practice, or perhaps the public feels that the University of Missouri has not developed non-agricultural programs to the extent that Michigan universities have.

% of those naming one or more additional functions

| Additional Functions | Missouri | Michigan |
|---|---|---|
| Agricultural experimentation, research and consultation services | 47% | 15% |
| Health and hospital: medical care, research, hospital services | 17 | 18 |
| Extension course offerings (non-agricultural) | 15 | 23 |
| Research (other non-agricultural, non-medical fields) | 14 | 23 |
| Raising general standard of living in state; economic improvement | 12 | 7 |
| Entertainment and cultural activities: plays, athletics, music, etc. | 9 | 18 |
| Circulation of educational materials (non-agricultural) | 6 | 16 |
| Improving quality of community leaders, etc. through institutes, short courses | 2 | 15 |

Rains Hampers Hobo Convention

BRITT, Iowa (AP) — Only nine hoboes braved the rain Tuesday to attend the 67th annual Hobo Convention.

But it took five votes before the Hardrock Kid could be elected king of the hoboes and receive his coveted crown—a coffee can.

The Kid, whose real name is John Mislen, a New Jersey native, regained the crown he lost last year to the Pennsylvania Kid, Richard Wilson.

Draft Rules For Students In College

BENTON -- Selective Service board 115 calls attention of college students to regulations:

An undergraduate student must file with his local board a written request for student deferment. Each local board has available a form which may be used for this request.

An undergraduate student must provide evidence that he has earned the required number of units, or hours, to be considered a full-time satisfactory student. For example, a student who is taking a four-year course which requires 120 hours to earn a degree should have earned 30 academic hours for each year he has attended school. Standing in class is no longer considered in determining whether a registrant is eligible to be considered for student deferment. He must have earned the necessary number of academic hours.

Under the new military selective service act, the student's academic year shall include the 12-month period following the beginning of his course of study.

Also under the new regulation, if a young man has not been reached for induction on account of his age before he enters college, consideration will be given to the granting of a II-S deferment even if there was a period when he was not in school. Once he enrolls in an undergraduate study program he must file a request for a student deferment, a full-time satisfactory student and not have reached his 24th birthday.

Graduate students also must request a student deferment. The graduate student should contact his local board for further information.

It is permissible and customary for the local board to consider a registrant for class II-S deferment while he attends a trade or technical school. He must request the student deferment and meet the requirement of being a full-time, satisfactory student.

Tito's Attempt to Kidnap the Bishop

Deep into the night the five men studied their plan to kidnap the Patriarch of the Serbian Orthodox Church of Trieste.

All the elements of cloak and dagger fiction were bound up in this fantastic scheme. There was the blackmail angle to ensure that the kidnapping was successful. There was loot, too.

Belgrade was sure the plot would succeed. Hadn't it taken measures to make sure that nothing would go wrong? No one would ever know -- at least not for sure -- that the Yugoslav communists had pulled off a kidnapping to destroy a church hierarchy.

That was the thinking behind Marshal Tito's plot to destroy the Serbian Orthodox Church of Trieste -- a true story so shocking it sounds unreal. The conspiracy, revealed in a 1965 U.S. Government document entitled, The Church and State Under Communism, Volume III, revealed the bloody religious persecution taking place under communism.

The attempted kidnapping of Doctor Dragoljub Vurdelja, says Senator Thomas Dodd, was for some strange reason completely ignored by the American press despite its drama, international ramifications, and its thorough coverage by the Italian press last December.

The case is best viewed within the context of the current effort on the part of the Serbian Orthodox Church in Yugoslavia to extend its control over its counterparts in other countries. The Serbian Orthodox Church in Trieste is a prize of particular importance; it has one of the finest Serbian cathedrals in the world, and Trieste is politically significant as an exit point for refugees from Yugoslavia.

Before Dr. Vurdelja became head of this church community in 1952, it was under the control of Marshal Tito. Dr. Vurdelja soon changed that -- separating it from connection with the Patriarchate in Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

To Tito, this church community was a political prize and a symbol of the score he had to even with. Dr. Vurdelja. There was only one thing to do: he had to abduct Dr. Vuldelja, spirit him across an unpatrolled section of the border and thus remove the most potent communist opposition within the Serbian Orthodox Community. With Dr. Vurdelja out of the way, communist elements within the church of Trieste would be able to assert themselves. It was typical racketeer rationale: the pro-Tito forces would control the rather considerable wealth of the church -- estimated to be more than 10 billion lire.

The chief plotter in the kidnap attempt was Livio Paolini, a rather unfortunate Italian national. His troubles began when he motored to Fiume, Yugoslavia. Marked as the communist's patsy, he was framed on a false charge of smuggling drugs into Yugoslavia by car. Paolini protested briefly that the drugs had been planted in the automobile without his knowleged. He was forced into the plan when the Yugoslav communists threatened blackmail: he could go to prison or agree to organize the kidnapping of Dr. Vurdelja.

Paolini returned Trieste and enlisted four accomplices. They set up careful surveillance of Dr. Vurdelja's daily movements throughout the city, and armed themselves with narcotics, nightsticks, technical equipment and two automobiles. Before the plan was executed, one of the four accomplices warned Dr. Vurdelja, and all five men were arrested.

During the trial, Dr. Vurdelja testified that the communists wanted to eliminate him and thereby confiscate the property of the church. He also testified that the kidnap effort wasn't Tito's first attempt to do him in: there was that time in 1946 when Tito tried something similar, plus an assassination attempt later. In each case, Dr. Vurdelja said, the plots had the cumbersome mark of Yugoslave brutality about them and had involved highly placed officials of the Yugoslav government.

When Paolini was asked why he didn't try to extricate himself from it all, he explained that Yugoslav agents said they would kill him, boasting they could eliminate a person in Trieste with no trouble at all because they had their own men at police headquarters.

On December 22, 1964, the Criminal Tribunal of Trieste found the five men guilty and sentenced them to prison terms ranging from two to six years. The men directly responsible were thus put away, but the masterminds of the plot--the men in Belgrade, from Tito on down--could not be tried and sentenced for this or other crimes against the Church.

Dr. Vuldelja had been fortunate, but other clergymen were not. According to the U.S. Senate report, 90 per cent of the Serbian Orthodox clergy has suffered from persecution by the Yugoslav regime. The Law Division of the Library of Congress, which prepared this revealing report, said:

"Long is the list of priests who have been shaved, spat upon, humiliated, and offended, who have been confined in penitentiaries, fortresses, and concentration camps."

Concerning persecution of the Catholic Church alone, of a total of 2,700 Croat priests, 400 have been killed, 200 have fled abroad, and several hundred have been jailed since 1946. Despite calculated slaughter and confinement of Godly men and destruction of churches, Tito is hailed by duped Americans as the kind of communist with which the free world can deal; that he is the "deviationist" who defies Moscow and is thus more acceptable to the West. This foolish idea crops up when a political solution to a world hot spot is elusive, and the appeasers suggest the formulation of a "Titoist" type regime as the solution. The folly of such is no better illustrated than by Tito's war against God.

When Tito's band of brigands proclaimed Yugoslavia a "republic" on November 29, 1945, the carnage against the church was already under way. In the year 1944 - 1945, Yugoslav communists executed 98 priests without a trial. Others experienced horrible trials by ordeal.

Jospi Cvijovic, leader of the Serbian Orthodox Church from 1944 to 1946, vehemently opposed the communist regime. Despite the threat of death and the burning of the patriarchate, he refused to recognize the communists. While interned in a monastery, his health deteriorated. He died a political prisoner in Belgrade on July 3, 1957. His death proved that Tito cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be thought of as more acceptable than the communists in Moscow or Peking.

There was also tragedy for Bishop Irinej Ciric. In 1945, under the guise of the so-called "people's authority," a night attack was made on his residence in Novi Sad. The Bishop was hit on the chest with a large stone, but saved himself by hiding in a shed. In 1946, he was stoned by a communist mob during a procession in the town of Odjaci. He fell to the ground, was beaten and spat upon, his beard was pulled (the classic act of humiliating a man of God), and his clothes were torn. Because of his injuries, he was bedridden for nine years. Bishop Ciric died April 5, 1955.

Other men of God in Yugoslavia are forced into a living death. Bishop Varnava A. Mastic, born in Gary, Indiana, went to Serbia at the age of nine. After his elevation to Bishop, he was sentenced to 11 years at hard labor on March 1, 1948 by the District Court of Sarajevo. The charges against him:

"Treason, weakening the economic and military power of the State, aiding terrorist bands, carrying on enemy propaganda, and espionage for the benefit of the Anglo - Americans." He served part of his sentence at Zenica penitentiary in solitary confinement. Though he was slowly tortured by starvation and thirst, his spirit did not break. His defiance was a source of moral strength to other inmates of Zenica penitentiary and, as a result, he was transferred to Sremska Mitrovica. An attempt was made to murder him, but succeeded only in breaking his feet and one arm. The last report on Bishop Nastic was that he is still confined at Sremska Mitrovica penitentiary, but only the Yugoslav communists know if he is still alive.

There are numerous other examples of communist disregard for the life of clergymen in Yugoslavia. Roman Catholic victims include: Dr. Josip Carevic, murdered in 1945 and thrown into a well just as he was about to celebrate the Mass; Bishop Anton Vovk of Ljubljana was severely burned at the railway station at Novo Mesto when gasoline was poured on his person and ignited.

The German Lutherans have, practically speaking, disappeared from Yugoslavia. 20,000 Calvinists are missing; many were killed, others were expelled.

When torture and murder fail, the Yugoslav campaign against the Church picks up momentum by state law. The state has deprived the church of its properties, vested rights, independent press and autonomy.

The various churches are governed by Communist bureaucracy known as commissions for religious affairs and headed by Communist Party members who have been specifically trained to combat religion. The Yugoslav communist regime also established the government - sponsored priests' associations - misnamed the "people's clergy" whose duty is to strengthen "the gallant national liberation struggle and in particular the people's authority."

The "priests' associations" are simply a means of supervising and pressuring the church for the benefit of the communist government. Members are known as "people's Priests" to distinguish them from those who are not members and who are therefore "against the people" -- in other words, against the communists.

The facts revealed by the U.S. Senate Report vividly illustrate the murderous Yugoslav communist attitude toward man's right to worship as he pleases. Indeed they show that communism under Tito is as anti-human and anti-God as communism under Lenin the Revolutionary, Stalin the master of Genocide, Mao, the Murderer of Tibetan Monks, Khrushchev "The Butcher of Budapest" and all who follow them in their attempts to subjugate the world.

The graves of clergymen in Yugoslavia are silent, but they tell the awful truth about Tito "the acceptable communist."

Little Timothy came in from Sunday School and his mother asked him what he had learned that morning.

He proceeded to tell her the Bible story about the people who were running away from the mean king and they didn't want to be captured. They came to some water and took out their walkie - talkies and asked a man across the river if it was safe to come across. He said yes and then they inflated their rubber rafts and floated everybody across and escaped.

His mother, slightly unbelieving, asked: "Is that really what your teacher told you about Moses and the people he was leading from bondage?"

Timmy said, "No. But if I told you what she really said I figured you'd never believe it."

The Sacrifice of Captain Quinn, Et Al

MINISTER DEFINES
BY THE REV. PETER KOEL
KNOST

Recently I had occasion to visit a United States Naval Hospital in the Boston area. I was invited to make the visit for the express purpose of meeting a young Army captain who had been recuperating for several months from wounds received in Vietnam. The captain's name was John Quinn, and his home was originally Berlin, New Hampshire.

On the day of my visit, as it happened, Captain Quinn learned that he had been awarded the Bronze Star with two "V" devices for Valour, and an Oak Leaf Cluster for exceptionally meritorious service in leading troops under stress and inspiring South Vietnamese soldiers to make a courageous stand. He had truly qualified as an American hero.

But there was still another decoration that John Quinn was to receive -- a decoration, however, that underscored a personal tragedy: the Purple Heart. The price of this American's gallantry was his right leg!

As I stood beside his bed, wondering whether he felt the price he paid was worth it, Captain Quinn made it quite clear to me that he believed it was. He had made a great sacrifice for his country. It was a proud sacrifice. And his country was more secure because of it. He, like countless other Americans, had risked life and limb to preserve Freedom -- to preserve the American Dream.

What is the American Dream?

You who fought and bled for America should know. You who have grown comfortably rich in America should know. You who enjoy opportunity unlimited in America should know. But do you know? Do you know what is happening to her now? Are you concerned with her future?

There are danger signs everywhere about us today. Unrest and discontent plague the masses. Crime and violence threaten the safety of our city streets. Riots and demonstrations have become commonplace. Our moral and spiritual standards -- our national moral and spiritual standards -- have been seriously weakened, much to the delight of the Communist conspiracy. We find our Supreme Court has declared it unconstitutional to teach our children in the public schools that this great Nation was founded "to the glory of God and the advancement of the ... faith." And we find much of our citizenry totally unconcerned and totally unaware of what is taking place.

Now these are the dangers threatening America today. They are grave dangers -- that would happily see the end of our national traditions. What is happening to America today? Is her spirit dead? Is she now afraid to fight for Freedom? Will she fail to oppose her enemies?

This much is certain: the dangers will continue until we fully regain our determination to fulfill the American Dream; until we fully understand that America is a Nation under God, singularly blessed, singularly free; great among all nations of the earth. And we will be convinced of this fact only by recognizing and accepting America's special Covenant with God.

Yes, contrary to what the enemies of religion are striving to obscure today, America was founded as a "Nation under God." With this ideal before them, the Founding Fathers bravely declared their independence.

Those who signed the Charter of Liberty were deeply concerned about the rights bestowed upon men by the Creator. They called them "unalienable rights." They were rights that belonged to every man, regardless of his station. They were rights that made men free. The signers of the Declaration of Independence of Thomas Jefferson, "the God liberty." They were willing to fight and to die for this ideal. That is why in the closing lines of their Document of Freedom, "with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine providence," they pledged to each other "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor." And their pledged improved to be a costly one. Many fought. Many died...

But these men knew full well the risks involved. Nothing would dissuade them from the holy mission that pertained to God-given rights. After all, Christ did not sit with the Caesars. And they were not about to sit with King George. Christ did not cast lots with the money - changers. And they were not about to sell their souls -- or their freedom -- for a handful of change.

Do you know what happened to the men who signed the Declaration of Independence? Do you know the suffering they endured? The night before the Declaration was adopted, John Adams of Massachusetts wrote his wife: "I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure it will cost us to maintain this Declaration." And cost it did! Five were captured and tortured to death by the British. Nine others fought and died from wounds or hardship. Twelve had their homes pillaged and burned. Two lost their sons in battle.

Most of these early patriots were young men. In fact, eighteen of them were under thirty. They were responsible, God-fearing family men who came from all walks of life -- lawyers and judges, merchants and farmers. But all had one ideal in common: Freedom under God. And all knew that by signing the Declaration they would be hanged if caught. Not one Escaped Abuse! All Fifty - six Signers Sacrificed Dearly!

And what are you sacrificing to keep America free? Captain John Quinn sacrificed a leg. Countless Americans have sacrificed their lives. Is it asking too much of you today to understand your American heritage and to endeavor to pass it intact to succeeding generations? Is it asking too much of you to read your Constitution, your Bill of Rights, your Declaration of Independence? They are, after all, truly your documents of Freedom. And they will live only as you, Mr. and Mrs. John Doe, seek to give them life.

We cannot combat the threats to our sovereignty if we do not understand what America was, is, and must continue to be: a free Nation under God! We cannot insure peace for America by abandoning our principles and compromising with communism. You can't compromise with evil. We cannot insure Freedom for America by imitating the socialist state. You can't have Freedom in servitude.

You see, peace and Freedom are not the products of politics. They are the blessings of righteousness. "Righteousness alone exalteth a nation." "That nation only is blessed whose God is the Lord."

Cary Grant's Wife Takes out Divorce Papers

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The life of Gary Grant undertook two years ago as husband of an actress 33 years younger—and then as a first-time parent—is apparently over.

With the same stunning suddenness with which Grant and Dyan Cannon announced their July 22, 1965, marriage, Miss Cannon, now 30, sued the 63-year-old actor for divorce Tuesday. She asked for custody of their 18-month-old daughter Jennifer.

Miss Cannon, whom Grant courted for more than three years prior to their secret Las Vegas, Nev., wedding, charged the star of sophisticated comedy treated her in "a cruel and inhuman manner."

Although the suit said they separated last Dec. 28, it was the first public acknowledgement the marriage was in trouble. Reports of a rift in Grant's fourth marriage were heard in Hollywood last January but they had been seen dining together in recent months.

The Grants lived in a secluded fashion, seldom attending Hollywood parties. Their major diversion was attending baseball games at Dodger Stadium.

When he became a father for the first time at age 62, he appeared to enjoy the new role. He told an interviewer of rising early to watch the 7:30 a.m. feeding and returning from his studio office in time for the 7 p.m. feeding.

He said of Jennifer: "She's the most winsome, captivating girl I've ever known and I've known quite a few girls."

In the suit, Miss Cannon said her own income is only $400 a year from residuals and asked for $5,470 a month expenses for herself and Jennifer. Miss Cannon said she is presently under the care of a psychiatrist.

She estimated Grant's income as $500,000 a year and his wealth at more than $10 million.

Grant's previous wives were actress Virginia Cherrill, dimestore heiress Barbara Hutton and actress Betsy Drake.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS

The 2nd World War was over for the people of Frankfurt, Germany. U.S. forces had marched into the city without meeting much resistance. The people of Frankfurt were tired and hungry. For years we had lived on rationed food. It was in the years of 1943-1945 that the Russians living in guarded working camps and the French prisoners of war were marched past our window to work in the factory right around the corner.

My mother, an invalid, often used to sit watching by the window. She saw despair, weariness, and hunger in the eyes of these prisoners. Moved by what she saw, she would take hunks of bread or make sandwiches from the little she had and drop them as she could from the window to those passing.

The thought that she was endangering her life by what she was doing didn't worry her much. She wanted to help, and that is what she did for more than a year.

Then came the day when the tables were turned. Our rations had dwindled to a starvation diet. The war was over. The prisoners of war were freed. The displaced Russians were free. No more guards, no more barbed-wire fences, no more marches to the factory. Some celebrated their freedom by plundering all the stores of what was in them, by stealing, assaulting people, getting drunk.

We were free, too, in a sense, but our freedom had a bitter taste. "What now?" was the general feeling. My mother and I had one package of Jello to eat between the two of us.

I remember my mother getting into her wheel chair while I stayed at home, because it was not safe for a 14-year-old to go anywhere. She wanted to come home with some dandelion greens at least. After one hour my mother returned, her hands outstretched, tears rolling down her face. Someone had remembered the bread morsels and sandwiches she had given to those that once had less and had put into her empty hands bread, butter, and chicken, enough to eat until supplies came to the town that had experienced chaos.

Challenge of Service

"In the years ahead, capitalism's main challenge and its greatest opportunities will not be in the mere satisfaction of the physical needs of man, great as those opportunities will be—great and growing. The challenges and opportunity will be in the providing of service, hardly dreamed of, in life preservation and extension, and life enrichment, in convenience and leisure and growth and the multiplication of choices men may make with the time at their disposal. Capitalism will, as it has in the past, be making the total use of science, of knowledge, of education and technology, in the interests, not of an elite but of all the people. And it is precisely this potency of capitalism that will bring about the rebirth of America's involvement in the challenges of underdevelopment in much of the rest of the world."

Man of Duty

ST. JOHN WADDELL
in the Commercial Appeal

He was a big, fine - looking man: Well over six feet tall with 200 pounds properly distributed over his powerful frame. His features were handsome, certainly not pretty. His face reflected determination, and purpose. There was often a twinkle in his eyes, for he had a real sense of humor.

He was subject to spells of hot anger, over which he established full control. He was equally self-possessed, and equally effective, in legislative halls, in the drawing room, in the savage wilderness and on the field of battle. He loved sports, and he loved his country.

He was born Feb. 22, 1732, in Virginia. His name was George Washington. He was the first president of the United States of America.

Fine as they were, physical and social attributes are not the reason his memory is revered. We observe the anniversary of his birth because his strength of character, his devotion to what he thought was right, and his steadfastness toward duty according to his lights made him the country's unquestioned leader of this country's revolution into America of today.

George Washington had this characteristic: He would carefully and honestly analyze a situation; he would conscientiously determine in his own mind the right solution; he would stand by the result unwaveringly. He had borne arms under the British king, but he also was convinced of the fairness of Britain's actions toward the colonies. Rebellion and change of allegiance were things demanding scrupulous moral honesty, he believed, and not until his concept of honor approved the change did he make it. But once the step was taken, turning back was for him unthinkable and impossible.

To his brother he wrote: "Under a full persuasion of the justice of our cause I cannot . . . entertain an idea that it will finally sink tho' it may remain some time under a cloud." Because of his faith he had fortitude to meet overwhelming difficulties. To him, defeats were merely temporary setbacks; victories were but longer or shorter steps toward success.

It is not surprising that, because of his wisdom, many of the things advocated by Washington are just as important to his nation today. Because of his father's death, his formal schooling ended when he was about 16. But he always believed that education should be one's lifelong study. And in his will he made provisions for bequests to numerous institutions of learning.

One of his beliefs is particularly applicable to our own region today. He urged establishment of a national university and provided an endowment in his will. This idea was based on the "indescribable regret" with which he had "seen the youth of the United States migrating to foreign countries, in order to acquire the higher branches of erudition and to obtain a knowledge of the sciences." His fear that they would be brainwashed with "anti-mus cordi congenial with republicanism" came not from doubt of republicanism, but from his perception of the danger of sending youth among other political systems before they "had well learned the value of their own."

It should never be forgotten that George Washington, like many of his colleagues, put everything on the line when he wholly adopted the cause of American liberty. He was willing to, and did, risk fortune, standing and life itself for the cause he knew was right. His property was not inconsiderable, his family stood high in the colonies, his reputation was honorable. If he had lost, he would have lost all. Since he won, he won all for the United States and its heritage today.

He took a crowd of green, untrained patriots and molded them into an efficient fighting machine which defeated the armies of Britain, then one of the world's most powerful nations.

His writings prove his devoutness and knowlege of Scripture. He was an Anglican churchman and a loyal one; but he was no prude.

He enjoyed dancing, the theater, horseracing and other diversions of the times. He liked his glass of Madeira wine with a friend, or with several. He was an engaging companion much in demand. That he was something of a ladies' man is hinted by the remark of a Virginia woman to a friend that "when General Washington becomes the chatty, agreeable companion, he can be downright impudent sometimes; such impudence, Fanny, as you and I like."

In the field, he seemed never to know the meaning of personal fear. His duty always came first.

Duty was not always easy. On one mission to deliver a fruitless ultimatum to the French near the shores of Lake Erie, when he and his guide started the return journey their horses gave out. They decided to walk all the way back to Virginia. On the way, Washington was shot at by a prowling French Indian, nearly drowned in crossing the ice-filled Allegheny, and nearly frozen from exposure.

Chateaubriand wrote that George Washington "aimed at that which it was his duty to aim at . . . blended his existence with that of his country. The name of Washington will spread with liberty from age to age."

We do well to honor an American like George Washington on the anniversary of his birth.

Lightest Mexico

By John Abney

Ixtapan de la Sal, Mexico—It appears that Mr. Arturo San Roman Is a poet as well as a heavy wheel in the business world. For the slogan of his new retirement colony here is "The Home of Your Dreams, Within Your Means."

And the reason for our sliding over here, aside from calming jaded nerves in his hot mineral baths, was to check his up-and-coming colony he is building for retired U.S. clients.

Mexico is in the process of setting up such colonies in several spots. Mr. San Roman, being a gentleman who is fast on the draw, got the jump and has already started his. Right next to his golf course and plush hotel looking up at the green mountains surrounding his health and take-it-easy resort.

Most of the other projects are still on the drawing board.

In addition to built-in scenery and climate (70 degree F. average all the time), he has put a number of model homes on the grounds and is working paved streets all around the real estate.

Eventually, states Mr. San Roman, there will be 250 homes running from two to four bedrooms. Tiled baths and the type of equipped kitchens ladies go for. Considerable built-in furniture which appeals to the master of the house since he doesn't have to move everything around for Spring cleaning.

Well, I asked Mr. San Roman the question everybody has been asking me in letters: "Can a U.S. citizen own property here?"

And he said yes indeed. Legal titles and everything like up home. Furthermore, every house gets a walled path for private sun tanning or a barbecue. Fountains and personal swimming pools if you want them.

Then he said look over here. That's where we're building the club house with a restaurant, soda fountain, recreation center and plenty of fun facilities.

"You want to play a round of golf?" he asked. He has more dynamite than an Atlas missile. It is a gorgeous course with pools and Japanese-type bridges. But I forgot (on purpose) my clubs. Anyhow I would rather soak up radioactive relaxation in his 132.5 F. waters. This conserves what energy is left in my threadbare carcass.

So he said, "We have nothing but purified water everywhere. Built our own plant up yonder on the mountain and there isn't a bug in the entire contruption."

And electricity. Mr. San Roman put in his own power plant with an auxiliary unit in case lightning hits the fan.

"How about groceries?" I asked, this being one of my chief concerns three times a day.

And he said, "We have our own truck farm. Raise all the food for the hotel customers and right over there at the shopping center we're building a modern supermarket.

"Also," he added, "a couple can live here comfortably for about $125 U.S. a month each, including payments on the house." (Runs about $80 a month, depending on the size and contents).

Ixtapan not only has a view and weather, It has history. Centuries ago the Aztec emperors discovered the hot springs and used to ride a portable throne over the mountains to pump up energy and recover from whatever ailed them.

When Mr. San Roman came rolling into town around 1946 he figured it had a future. And he set about building his Hotel Ixtapan, five swimming pools and the Roman baths where you wallow in a private king size tub full of hot mineral water. Onyx walls with low lights and piped in music.

And I looked about his new colony and began counting the change in my hip pocket bank. This took three fingers and about 35 seconds.

Oh well, maybe one day.

---

A sale was in progress in a Boston store, and a white-haired gentleman in a narrow-brimmed homburg approached the saleswoman at the counter. With the merest gesture, he indicated one of the billfolds on the counter. "The price, please?"

"That's a real bargain," said the clerk. "It's reduced to $12.50."

"Rather costly, I should say."

"It's genuine walrus, sir! It will last forever."

"But I will not," he said crisply. A wasteful investment averted, he marched away.

The morning has a melody
In every tree that grows
Because the mockingbirds can voice
The sound of sun and rose;
I breathe their melodies at dawn
And feed my soul the song
Of rhapsody they conjure up
I translate for my morning prayer.

Desi Returns As Producer And Director

DEL MAR, Calif. (AP) — Desi Arnaz, in the period following his divorce from Lucille Ball, sold his stock in Desilu, quit show business and retired to his horse farm, his boat, the track and golf course. He stood it for three years, but now he's back with both feet— and seems a little surprised.

"Things that got me where I was were the things I couldn't do when I got there," said the man who built a camera technique and a comedy series into a giant production company, Desilu, and a fortune.

Arnaz, now in his early fifties, has picked up some weight and his hair shows considerably more salt than pepper. After three years in retirement and two developing new shows he was lured back into television as producer and director of NBC's new comedy series, "The Mothers-in-Law," and has even been persuaded to act in one of the episodes.

After directing the first eight episodes, he is sidelined at his beach home at this Pacific Ocean resort recuperating from a freak accident which almost took his life. A veranda on which he was sitting collapsed and threw him against a metal stake, puncturing his side and requiring emergency surgery.

"I got where I didn't want to be because things began parlaying," said Arnaz, lighting a slim cigar and squinting at the ocean through dark glasses.

"We had a little studio and 'I Love Lucy' and then to compete we had to get a larger studio and from there on we had to get out or get bigger. We wound up with three big studios. But by 1962 I decided I didn't want to be Lew Wasserman (head of Universal Studios). I wanted to be Willie Wyler (a top film director)."

But for three years, Desi was neither. But his attention inevitably was caught by a book which he thought would make a good movie. Soon William Paley, chairman of the Columbia Broadcasting System, called him, Arnaz said, and asked if he really intended to return to work— outside television.

"No more rat race," Desi told him. "No more wanting things day before yesterday."

"It takes three years to get even in television while losing $5,000 or $10,000 a year," he explained. "I was even then and I didn't know anything about comedy shows with gimmicks where the people take pills or live in bottles. . . Comedy is where you pile one joke on top of another joke and people laugh.

But the result was that Desi Arnaz returned to television, signed by CBS, his old network, to develop shows. And the first venture was based on an idea that had been kicking around Desilu since "I Love Lucy" days.

He first managed to get back Bob Carroll Jr. and Madelyn Davis who had written all 180 original Lucy shows. Eve Arden was added as the star comedienne, and although not Desi's first choice, Kaye Ballard joined her when Arnaz saw her performing in a night club.

The show was called "The Mothers-in-Law." Then CBS and a rich, important sponsor interested him in finding a situation comedy for Carol Channing. Everything seemed to be going swimmingly.

He planned to use the three-camera, live-on-film technique, made before a studio audience, which he developed for "I Love Lucy."

But then the come-back story of Desi Arnaz took an unexpected turn. First "The Carol Channing Show" was dropped— then CBS turned thumbs down on "The Mothers-in-Law."

Bidding Begins For Cigarette Filter Rights

NEW YORK (AP)— Columbia University, in the cigarette filter business through a strange sequence of events, is negotiating with a dozen tobacco companies but the dollars-and-cents dickering has scarcely started, a spokesman said today.

The subject of negotiations is the Strickman filter, claimed by its inventor, Robert L. Strickman, to be 70 per cent more effective than the filters now in use.

Strickman, who developed the filter in a laboratory in Hillsdale, N.J., says he offered it to Columbia after he failed to even get into the offices of major American tobacco firms in his effort to sell it.

Proceeds from Columbia's half interest are to be used for education and research, including cancer research. Estimates of possible proceeds range up to $100 million a year.

Testimony concerning the filter is to be given to the Senate Commerce Committee Thursday by Dr. Grayson Kirk, president of Columbia, and Drs. Donald Tapley and Cushman Haagensen, medical consultants to the university on the project.

The committee, headed by Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., opens hearings today on smoking hazards and efforts to make cigarettes less dangerous to health.

John E. D. Grunow, former cement company executive named a special assistant to Kirk to handle commercial aspects of the Strickman project, said that in addition to the six major American tobacco manufactures, a number of foreign tobacco firms have started discussions with Columbia about purchase of rights to the filter.

Columbia has had the filter tested by an independent Manhattan laboratory. Results reportedly confirmed Strickman's tests.

Columbia also has conducted tests which officials say indicate that the Strickman filter could be produced at about the same cost as filters now in use, and has run tests on the comparative taste of cigarettes with the Strickman and other filters.

While carrying out the trash the other day, I ran into a four-year-old neighbor, Jerry, with a little boy that I didn't know. I asked Jerry to introduce his friend.

"This is Mike," said Jerry, "and he's only four."

"But Jerry, you're only four," I replied.

"Yes," said Jerry with dignity, "but Mike isn't four enough."

Doctor Who Developed Birth Control Pill Dies

BOSTON (AP) — The drive back to Worcester from New York on a winter's day in 1950 had been a long one, but instead of going straight home, Dr. Gregory Pincus went to his research laboratories, so great was the challenge he had been requested to perform.

The day before, at the urging of Margaret Sanger, founder of the Planned Parenthood Federation, and his physician-friend Abraham Stone of the federation, Dr. Pincus had agreed to undertake research that would seek an entirely new, more reliable method of birth control for women.

Returning to the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, which he and Dr. Hudson Hoagland had founded in 1944, Dr. Pincus and close associates began planning the research project that would lead to development of the first practical oral contraceptive pill.

Tuesday, 10 years after the pill he developed was approved by the Food and Drug Administration for use in treating threatened abortion and menstrual disorders and seven years after its approval as a prescription contraceptive, Dr. Pincus died at age 64.

Peter Bent Brigham Hospital listed the cause of death as myeloid metaplasia, a disease of the blood and spleen akin to leukemia.

Although he achieved worldwide fame for his contraceptive pill Dr. Pincus also developed estrone, a hormone used in treating breast cancer, and was recognized as an authority on both the reproductive cycles of mammals and sex hormones.

A $2,100 grant from the Planned Parenthood Research Fund started research on the contraceptive pill.

In determining the goals for a new approach to birth control, Dr. Pincus rejected the idea of painful and potentially expensive injections and settled on a pill as the ideal physiological contraceptive.

His approach centered on progesterone— a hormone, or one of the chemical controllers of body processes— which is secreted by a woman's ovaries in large quantities after ovulation.

Working with Dr. Min-chueh Chang, who conducted the experimental observations on rabbits and rats, Dr. Pincus demonstrated that progesterone administered orally could inhibit ovulation in animals.

Then in collaboration with Dr. John Rock at the Free Hospital for Women in Boston, Dr. Pincus began to apply the work to humans— using progesterone compounds first to correct infertility in women.

The large doses of progesterone required to inhibit ovulation were a drawback for its uses as a contraceptive, however, and Dr. Pincus began a search for a progesterone-like compound that could be effective in small doses. He and Dr. Chang tested almost 200 compounds that had been supplied by drug manufacturers and selected a handful that were most effective. Then they did the chemical analysis work which described a progesterone-like compound that combined the best chemical features of those they had experimented with. The result was a pill marketed under the trade name Enovid.

Dr. Pincus, a native of Woodbine, N.J., is survived by his widow, Elizabeth; a son, John, of Washington; a daughter, Mrs. Michael Bernard of Cambridge; three brothers and a sister.

Vitamin Coolers

Hot? Thirsty? Suffering through sultry summer days? What you need is a refreshing, vitamin C cooler -- a tingling glass of orange juice or some thirst-quenching orange beverage!

Orange juice needn't be reserved for breakfasts or special occasions. Like a basic dress, it will go anywhere, any time of day or night.

A glass of pure and simple orange juice will please almost anyone with a summertime thirst. What's more it is one of the most nutritious beverages you can offer when someone in your family needs to wet his whistle.

Add some spices, fruit or ice cream, and that same flavorful juice will be dressed up for entertaining guests, or serving the family a special treat.

By all means keep a jugful of orange juice in your refrigerator, ready to serve. You'll find it a ready answer to family thirsts and refreshments for surprise guests.

You'll also find it a boon to your food budget, for orange juice, particularly frozen concentrate, is quite attractively priced these days. Supplies are such that the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Consumer and Marketing Service is listing canned, fresh and frozen concentrated orange juice among our currently most plentiful foods.

Here are a few ideas for turning your jugful or orange juice into extra special slipping.

POLKA DOT PUNCH

2 6-oz. cans frozen orange juice concentrate
1 6-oz. can frozen grapefruit juice concentrate
1 6-oz. can frozen limeade concentrate
1 quart gingerale

Polka Dot Ice Cubs

Reconstitute the orange and grapefruit concentrates, according to directions on cans. Combine with limeade concentrate, undiluted. Just before serving, add gingerale and ice cubs.

Polka Dot Ice Cubs are made by pouring orange or grapefruit juice in ice cub trays. Place a fresh strawberry, raspberry, blackberry or blueberry in each section. Freeze until firm.

SPICED ICE TEA

6 whole cloves
8 whole allspice
1/2 cup sugar
2 teaspoons lemon juice
1-3/4 cups tea, chilled
Ice cubes
1-1/4 cups orange juice, chilled

In medium saucepan, combine spices and sugar with 1-1/4 cups water; bring to boiling. Reduce heat; simmer 20 minutes. Let cool; then strain.

Add the juices and tea. Serve over ice cubes in tall glasses. Makes 4 servings.

LOW-CAL COOLER

Mix or shake 1/4 cup orange juice concentrate with 3/4 cup buttermilk. Serve in tall glass.

ORANGE FIZZ

Fill tall glass with crushed ice. Spoon in 3 tablespoons orange juice concentrate. Fill to top with gingerale and top with sprig of mint of maraschino cherry.

Democratic to Forgive

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The Congressional Directory issued last March lists Gov. Robert McNair of South Carolina as a Republican instead of a Democrat.

In a letter to John F. Haley, head of the directory, McNair asked Tuesday that the mistake be corrected and said: "It is human to err, but Democratic to forgive."

Pipemaker Puts Customer off

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — The lady said she'd like to buy a set of bagpipes but the pipemaker said come back next year.

Roberta Golden, blonde violinist with the Cleveland Orchestra, sought to buy the pipes Tuesday.

But pipemaker Andrew Ross sold her instead a chanter, a sort of wooden whistle on which bagpipers serve their apprenticeship.

She tried the chanter in Ross' workrooms and after a few moments puffing said: "It was a much harder blow than I expected." She promised to practice and come back next year.

Bullets Thrown Into Blaze Injure Boy

CARUTHERSVILLE - Throwing .22 caliber bullets into a fire can be dangerous as Timmy Thorton of West Washington, Hayti, found out. He is now in Baptist Hospital, Memphis, with a fragment of a .22 shell casing lodged next to his lung.

The accident occurred Tuesday at 7 p.m. when the nine-year-old youth was playing with another friend near a trash fire. Harold Thorton, Timmy's father, said that the neighbor threw .22 shells into the fire. Timmy, not knowing the danger, stayed close to the fire while the other boy ran.

The shells went off, seemingly together, and a casing fragment from one of the shells struck the Thorton youngster and imbedded itself into the muscle next to the right lung.

The boy was taken to Pemiscot Memorial Hospital, Hayti, where he received emergency treatment and was transferred to the Memphis hospital. The boy was reported in good condition.

Three hours of surgery Thursday at Memphis failed to remove the fragment. Doctors are trying to decide whether to operate again or to leave the fragment where it is.

Two Pemiscot Boys Die in

CARUTHERSVILLE--The accidental deaths of two small Pemiscot county children, boys, were reported Saturday by Coroner Jimmy Osburn, who was called to investigate both cases but did not hold inquests since cause of death was obvious in each instance.

The first was that of 11-month old William Earl Walker, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Walker, who are tenant farmers on land owned by Clyde Southern on Steele Route 3.

The baby was playing in the yard shortly after noon Friday when he apparently came in contact with a pole supporting a tv antenna and was electrocuted.

Osburn said the pole was checked by workmen from Ark-Mo Power Company, who reported that it contained a current of 125 volts of electricity.

The child's funeral will be Saturday morning with Germany Funeral Home of Steele in charge.

The other death was that of two-year-old James Warren, whose mother, Eula Mae Warren, found him smothered in bed about two a.m. Saturday.

Osburn said the child was sleeping in a bed with four other children and was found wrapped up in a blanket between the bed and a wall. The family live at 307 East 14th Street.

Carter Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.

Loungewear For Trousseau

By HELEN HENNESSY
Women's Editor
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

NEW YORK—(NEA)—Fall is a big season for weddings and the season offers good news for the bride who is getting together her loungewear trousseau. The romantic long gown is back.

Twiggy, mini and groovy styles may reign supreme by day, but in the late quiet hours, at-home clothes have never looked more elegant and feminine.

What's around right now in romance via the clothes line? If you're slender, empire gowns gathered under the bosom with tucks, ribbons or gathers are great. Body skimming shifts often slit to the hip, free flowing tents, Far Eastern caftans, palazzo pajamas and swishy culotte dresses are right for any figure type. Tall brides look glamorous in ankle-length Grecian-styled skims that enhance their statuesque appearance.

BRIDAL BOUQUET tossed on tricot in a profusion of pink morning glories (left) provides the delicate print for this lace-trimmed, ankle-length robe. Elegant caftan traced in lace (right) is worn over a silky white column of bridal beauty. These are of Burlington tricot by Lucie Ann.

Gone are the wishy-washy pastels. Trousseau loungewear now comes in strong true shades like sunny yellow, lush peach, bright grass green, deep pink and jungle violet. The colors solo or combine into zingy stripes. Pucci-type prints, geometric and abstract patterns.

Ankle-length peignoir sets, robes and gowns have been gone from the bridal fashion scene because of the time and effort needed to keep them bandbox fresh. But fabric manufacturers today have played Cupid and created luxurious man-made tricot fabrics for all of the latest at-home looks. Machine washable and dryable tricot fashions need little if any ironing.

And "after the honeymoon is over" the stereotyped tableau of the young wife wearing a wrinkled robe over a droopy, faded gown as she serves breakfast to a husband hidden behind the morning paper is a thing of the past.

Today's loungewear will catch and keep his eye only on her. And that's where she wants it.

Back to School in Style

PULLOVER DRESS in cotton knit by Smartee (left) answers the question of what to wear back to school for fall '67. A-shaped, long-sleeved and regimental-striped in red, yellow, navy and white this fashion is in a class by itself. The contemporary schoolgirl look (right), cleverly conceived by Junior House of Milwaukee, combines a bright yellow broadcloth shirt with a navy cotton homespun suit. Brass buttons fasten the cardigan jacket and the front-paneled skirt that hides a culotte.

Longest Cathedral

Winchester Cathedral, located in the city of Winchester, county of Southhampton, England, was built in the second half of the 7th century and is the longest cathedral in England. It is almost 556 feet in length, according to the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Gondolas were made necessary as a method of transportation in Venice, Italy, because the city is actually built on an archipelago of islands and mud flats. All gondolas in Venice had to be painted black by an ordinance of the Venetian senate in 1562.

Letters to the Editor

Aug. 22, 1967

Dear Editor:

Would you please print this letter.

I attended a county school board meeting along with about seventy-five other New Madrid County residents on Aug. 18, 1967. I am only a voter of New Madrid County and I am beginning to wonder if this is anything to be proud of, since our local paper (Sikeston Standard) states that we have a political boss in our county. I believe you will find that the dictionary defines the word boss to mean a cow or calf, but I believe in this case the definition that fits best would be a person who controls a political organization, I don't believe any one person should be allowed to control a group of people, or I don't think six people should control a group of people either, I think we should be informed of what is going on, and then the majority should rule.

Bill Dillon told the group of people at the school board meeting that the public had been informed of this plan to reorganize the county schools, before our school board voted, five to one in favor of the proposed reorganization. Mr. Dillon, I carried one of those petitions. I asked ninety seven people to read it and to sign it if they so wished, ninety five signed it, and at least eighty voluntarily told me they knew nothing about it. A few told me they had read in the paper about the meeting (I also attended) at Delmo when Mr. Conran explained the reorganization plan. But at this time our school board had already voted, and I have yet to meet a person that knew the school board was going to vote on such a plan until they already had.

The five hundred and seventy five people who signed these petitions only are asking for a chance to vote, so the people of our district can decide for ourselves what is best for our children, we need the best education we can give our children, and the closest to home.

I understand Sikeston has only offered us an education for our children. We are not asking for a position or anything of this sort, most of us are accustomed to working for a living, we are just asking for a chance to give our children the best education.

Mr. Dillon, Mr. Crumpecker, Mr. Sherrard, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Menees, all we want is a chance to vote - a New Madrid County mother of four school children.

Ann Landers

Inactivity Bores Couple

Dear Ann Landers: My husband and I have a nice home, well-furnished, a new car and money in the bank. Our two sons have finished college, are happily married and doing well. We have excellent jobs and our combined income makes it possible for us to live comfortably.

So why am I writing to Ann Landers? Because suddenly we find life empty and boring. We have no goals, nothing to struggle for. We were much happier when we had to worry about house payments, taxes, mortgages and tuition bills.

Are we different or does this happen to all couples in the twilight years? We need answers. --THE W'S

Dear W's: You need more than answers. You need to get out of your fur-lined, insulated world and become involved with some causes or projects or people to whom you can devote your time, energy and your money.

Contentment does not come from lapping up creature comforts and taking life easy. But this you already know, since this is the thrust of the problem as you have expressed it. Get busy and find out how to make your lives count for something. The world needs what you have to offer. And you need to become dues-paying members of the human race.

Dear Ann Landers: Several weeks ago, three of us (all college students) borrowed a buddy's car. I was driving. Unfortunately, we had an accident. Nobody was hurt but the damage to our buddy's car amounted to $175. There was no insurance so the money had to come out of my pocket. I think the two fellows with me should help with the repair bill. They say, "No. You were driving."

Is this fair? Answer in the paper because if my folks see a letter from you and find out I had another accident, I'll get grounded for life. - - BIG D

Dear D.: Another accident, eh? It sound as if you've got quite a history, fella. Maybe you SHOULD be grounded until you are taking some driving lessons, and I am not kidding.

First, I'd like to make it clear that anyone who drives without insurance is a moron. Second, you don't say who was at fault but I have an idea you were. In this case, your passengers should not be expected to pitch in. If someone had hit you and you were blameless I'd agree with you, but not under these circumstances.

Dear Ann Landers: My husband plays ball with the "boys" (about age 40) one night a week and comes home around 2:00 A.M.

Others nights he gets home anywhere from 7:30 to 11 P.M. He hasn't had dinner with me and our four teen-agers in three years.

This man has never brought home an extra dime for overtime and he hasn't had a raise in 10 years. I've been typing papers at home so we can pay our bills. Should I wake up and smell the coffee? -- QUIET DESPERATION

Dear Quiet -- Or are you unconscious? Did you just notice that your husband hasn't had dinner with his children in three years? It's going to be difficult to get him to stop doing whatever he's doing -- after all this time. You need more help than I can offer. I suggest a professional counselor. Yes, I know, he won't go. So go yourself and learn what you can do to get this 40-year-old teenybopper to behave like a husband and a father.

What is French kissing? Is it wrong? Who should set the necking limits -- the boy or the girl? Can a shotgun wedding succeed? Read Ann Landers' booklet, "Teen-age Sex - - Ten Ways To Cool It." Send 50¢ in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Husband Must Support Test Tube Infant

Lois and Marvin had been married for a number of years but their marriage produced no crops. Disappointed, Lois appealed to Marvin to allow her to have a test tube baby, and he reluctantly consented. Unfortunately, while science may solve one problem, it sometimes creates ten others. When the baby came, Marvin left.

Left stranded at the bassinette, Lois sued Marvin for his running out on her and demanded that he be ordered to support "their" child.

"It's not my kid," was Marvin's answer. "As far as I'm concerned, it's as illegitimate as a three dollar bill."

"That's not so," protested Lois. "Since he consented to my having the baby, he can't turn his back on it. It's 'our' child and he's got to support it."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you require Marvin to support the test tube child?

This is how the judge ruled: He held that Marvin's consent to the scientific baby did not make it any more legitimate than if he had consented to his wife's having a lover. But, the judge added, since he consented to its being born, he implied agreement to support the child and he must do so.

Scott County HealthCenter

1966 Annual Report

In Scott County we have developed the philosophy that regulations are instructional tools-- to accomplish reasonable comfort and reasonable safety rather than inspection check procedures.

Simple inspection procedures will not generally lead to up grading and will only lead to forced perpetual compliance with existing minimum standards.

Therefore, to provide for improvement, we in Scott County:

1. Hold annual food personnel training school for waitresses and cooks.
2. Hold dairy producer meetings and also meet frequently with plant personnel.
3. Work with City Councils to promote up-to-date ordinances concerning milk, food, garbage and refuse, insects and rodents, water and air pollution and many other health related problems.
4. Attend in-service training programs.

By providing a pleasant working climate between our office and all officials, we reflect a good compromise between what is ideal and what is reasonable.

The Scott County Sanitation programs cover a great number of minor activities that are too numerous to mention. Our years of experience, education, and training make us qualified to handle directly all phases of environmental sanitation.

Environmental sanitation involves the control of your environment in order to prevent disease outbreaks. This job involves a great many health fields. Your local Health Department carries out work in approximately 34 major health fields to control health hazards in your environment. If you will take but a moment to look over this list of health fields, you will realize what a vast job environmental sanitation is.

Kennedy Not Ready to Give Up Arms Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, defeated in a Senate skirmish over firearms legislation, said today the setback does not indicate that President Johnson's gun control proposal is doomed.

But a Republican foe of the administration measure said the Senate decision to continue the Pentagon's civilian marksmanship program pointed in that direction.

"I think it is an indication of the attitude of the Senate on matters of this kind," Sen. Roman L. Hruska, R.-Neb., said in an interview.

Kennedy tried Tuesday to eliminate from the defense appropriations bill funds for operation of the 65-year-old civilian markmanship program, administered by the National Rifle Association.

The Senate voted 67 to 23 against his amendment, which also would have halted free distribution of ammunition to NRA marksmen's clubs and their nearly 385,000 members.

Kennedy, a Massachusetts Democrat, said the program is costing the government $5 to $10 million a year, and based his argument on economy.

The Pentagon has estimated its cost at about $4 million, and has said the Johnson gun control measure would not interfere with operation of the program.

Soviets Issue Warning

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet government warned tonight that what it called the latest U. S. escalation of the war in Vietnam will "inevitably lead to the necessary retaliatory steps."

A statement issued by the official Soviet news agency Tass condemned Washington's course as dangerous "because it further aggravates the international situation and may bring the world to a dangerous point."

The statement said, "Soviet official quarters are drawing corresponding conclusions from the new criminal actions of the American imperialists." It did not spell out what these actions are or what "necessary retaliatory steps" will be taken.

This was the first official response in Moscow to the widening of bombing targets in Vietnam ordered by the United States last week.

"The U.S. aggression against Vietnam is assuming an ever more extensive and sinister nature," the statement declared.

It was read on Soviet radio and television simultaneously with its release by Tass news agency, insuring the broadest possible reception by the Soviet people.

The statement consisted basically of positions already taken by the Soviet government. The repetition of these in connection with the stepping up of the Vietnamese war was apparently meant to make Washington pause and reconsider before going any further.

It was left open which government or governments would take the threatened retaliatory steps. There was nothing in the wording itself to make this necessarily refer to the Soviet Union. It could mean only that North Vietnam and the Viet Cong would fight back harder.

But the threat was definitely created that some more dangerous form of retaliation might be undertaken.

Lester H. Bishop Re-elected Director of Sikeston PCA

Chester Lauck, Hot Springs, Ark., the "Lum" of an old nationwide radio program, told an audience of 1,300, gathered for the 34th annual meeting of the Sikeston Production Credit Association at the National Guard Armory:

"We may be living high on the hog, but it's not our hog--it belongs to our children and our children's children."

Lester H. Bishop, East Prairie, was director of the association. His opponent was Carl Simpkins, also of East Prairie.

The program opened at 7:30 p.m. last night with Paul Bradley, New Madrid, president in charge. The invocation was given by Gene Lancaster, Portageville.

Lauck, retired from radio in 1955, as co-partner in the Lum and Abner comedy hour in the "Jot 'Em Down Store," series for 25 years.

"We have made more contributions in this world than all other countries combined--and all of it was due to our free enterprize system," Lauck said.

Lauck said he read that, "just before World War II our farmers produced enough for ten families, and today they are producing enough for 30 families and have stored $8 billion in commodities.

"Compare this with Russia, who is not producing enough for their own people," he said.

"I'm concerned about our national debt and our socialistic programs. We're even getting something we didn't ask for, and it's causing us to lose our self respect. I think people in the middle west are a pretty steady stock and are industrious. They want an opportunity to do what they are capable of doing.

"We are going to have to make a choice," said Lauck, "by building our own character, or building our own destruction."

In a business meeting, Charles Causey, Bloomfield, vice-president, gave a directors report.

Thatcher Scism, manager of the central office in Sikeston, gave a financial report for the first six months of 1967 showing loans made, 1,290 and 1,372; respectively, amount of loans, $15,593,271 and $17,239,727; cost of loans 5.07 per cent and 6 per cent; loans outstanding, $21,892,896 and $24,975,841; net income in 1966 was $163,179.72. interest from loans for the same period was $577,255 and $706,246, with a total income of $690,014 and $828,415. Total assets were $23,841,174 and $26,950,162, with a net worth of $3,238,870 and $3,411,353.

Each of the eight field offices at Sikeston, Charleston, Dexter, Poplar Bluff, Jackson, Portageville, Advance and Lutesville, presented door prizes.

Entertainment was furnished by the Ramblers, composed of David Bird, Barbara Armour and Bob Lambert, all of Sikeston.

A second group of entertainers, known as The Lamplighters of the Ark-Mo. Power company, entertained with six numbers. The members are Bill Lovelace and Jack Tapp, both of Blytheville, and Otha Odom and Arthur Cleveland, both of Walnut Ridge, Ark., and Ron Seal of Kennett.

Train Blast Evacuates 6,000

TEXARKANA, Tex. (AP) — Explosions and fire erupted in four derailed chemical cars of a freight train today, forcing the evacuation of 6,000 persons in a 1½-mile area and injuring 10 persons.

The evacuations were ordered as a precaution against possible poisonous fumes from the chemicals.

Fire and police officials issued an all clear at 10 a.m. after the fire burned itself out and residents began returning to their homes.

Seven of the injured were Texarkana firemen and three were Red Cross workers who were called in to help care for the evacuees. The injured were taken to a hospital for emergency treatment of cuts and burns. None was believed seriously hurt.

The evacuees were moved into four school buildings and the Marine Corps Reserve Center.

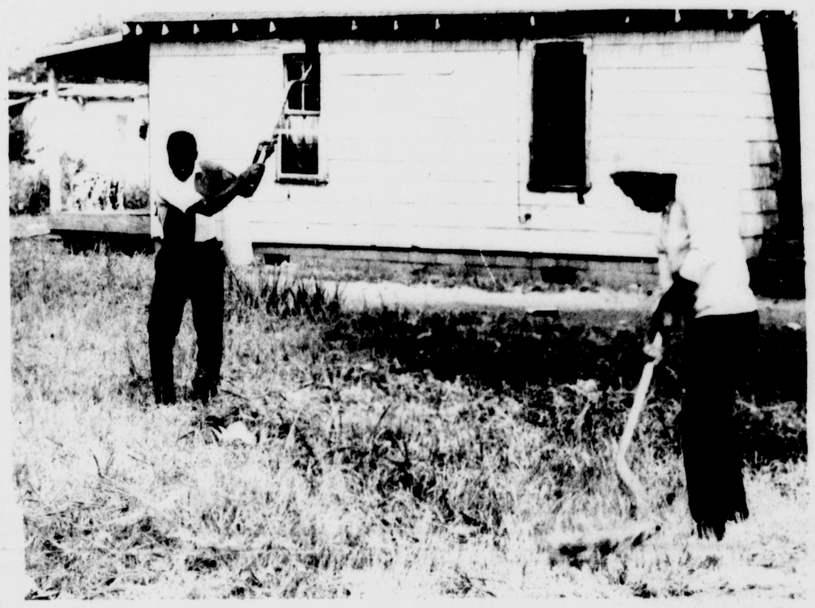
The derailment occurred Tuesday night on the grounds of the International Creosote plant. The area is about two miles off U.S. 59 on the southwest edge of this city which straddles the Texas-Arkansas line.

Police said nine cars were derailed and four were on fire. All fire fighting equipment was moved back from the scene because of the possibility of more explosions.

One car was loaded with what the State Department of Public Safety called "a highly explosive chemical." Another contained nitric acid, another liquid plastic, one fertilizer and at least two held naphtha.

Cause of the derailment was not immediately determined.

TEENAGERS IN SUNSET began a painting and cleaning project today on Alabama Street. The group is working every day till school starts, and will then work after school in work parties to improve the appearances of the area.



CHARLES LAMBERT, left, and Johnnie Stewart began cutting weeds near a house at Alabama and North streets in Sunset today. The youths are participating in a project to improve the appearances of the area.

Work Project Begins

The first visible outgrowth of the plans proposed by Recovery Inc. and the Missourians, a group of young Negro leaders in Sunset, appeared today.

About 60 teenage boys and girls have volunteered to paint houses, cut weeds, dispose of trash and clean up the Sunset area, Carolyn Gardner, team captain of one group of girl workers, said.

Miss Gardner received several gallons of paint and some brushes today from Dr. Robert Lively, chairman of the Community Betterment Committee of Recovery Inc.

Dr. Lively said downtown merchants were contributing the paint and brushes. Shad Old, committee member, said that a surprising number of merchants and other concerned individuals were anxious to contribute materials to such a project.

The work is being done by the youths of Sunset. They have undertaken a crash program to completely clean up Alabama street, hopefully this week. They will then work on North street.

About 16 property owners have been contacted and are willing to allow the youths to paint their houses or the trimmings. Some houses could not be improved by paint alone, and the teenagers have no remedy for them. But they are clearing weeds and litter, where they find them.

City equipment including lawn mowers and dump trucks will be available for hauling trash on Saturdays.

The teenagers volunteered for the project when two members of the Missourians approached them this week. Lewis Wiggins and George Wolfe talked to the youths at the Sunset Improvement Club and about 60 volunteered.

Groups are divided into six boys or girls. Each group has a captain and a team leader to co-ordinate the work.

Although the youths are receiving no pay, they are anxious to do as much as they can, before school starts, Miss Gardner said.

But they plan to continue improving the area after school, next week. Long range plans have not been made, but the project is expected to continue for a month or more, Wolfe said.

A block party is planned for the group when they complete their work on Alabama street. Refreshments will be provided by the persons living on Alabama.

Wolfe was bringing rakes and cycles to the boys engaged in clearing a lot of weeds this morning. He said a city mower would arrive later today to cut the weeds shorter.

Bill Stokes, superintendent of the street department, met with one working group this morning and asked if he could bring them any other equipment. They requested some brooms.

The young men team captains are: Eddie Marshall, Dennis Snelling, Bobby Lambert, Johnnie Stewart, Otis Applewhite, Charles Lambert and Arthur Jackson.

Girl team captains are: Viola Blow, Gail Warfield, Elizabeth Geralds, Everlean Gipson and Pearl Grant.

Military Praise Backs Bombing

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. bombing of North Vietnam is effective and should be continued, Adm. T. H. Moorer, new chief of naval operations, testified today.

"Our air effort against North Vietnam is making a major contribution to the achievement of our objectives in South Vietnam," he said. "Now is certainly not the time to terminate, or decrease in any way, this pressure on the enemy.

Moorer, who took over as top naval officer Aug. 1, testified before a closed session of the Senate defense preparedness investigating subcommittee. Portions of his prepared testimony were released to newsmen.

His testimony backed the stand taken by other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and echoed a theme repeated by other generals and admirals: Bomb more while North Vietnam suffers.

Moorer said effectiveness of the air attacks has been enhanced recently "by the assignment of additional lucrative targets."

He did not elaborate, but U.S. planes have been hitting more often near Hanoi and along the Red Chinese border. This has led to indications the brunt of the attack may be shifting to the heavily defended, politically sensitive northeast quadrant of North Vietnam.

Moorer said the targets in North Vietnam are being hit with "almost surgical precision." Unusual accuracy and controls are needed, he said, to minimize "risk of expanding the war to include Communist China and the Soviet Union."

He said the precision is demonstrated in the destruction of specific bridges and power plants within what under other circumstances would be a military target complex.

The northeast area, which includes the vital railroad link with Communist China's weapons and munitions factories, is regarded as Hanoi's main base area for the war in South Vietnam.

In Saigon Tuesday Air Force spokesmen said the stepped-up attacks in the northeast are severely hurting North Vietnam's capacity for war, and a high-ranking officer declared:

"Hammer, hammer, hammer with everything you can because you know it hurts them. I know they're beaten. The question is: When are they going to quit?"

Meanwhile Gen. John P. McConnell, Air Force chief of staff, told the Senate Preparedness subcommittee examining the bombing campaign: "The cumulative effect of this increasing pressure by air has brought us to the point where we have begun to hurt the enemy in his home territory."

One week ago, Army Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was telling the same group the raids have resulted in "steady destruction of the country's physical infrastructure and deterioration of the national economy."

And on Aug. 9, Adm. Ulysses S. G. Sharp, Pacific commander in chief, testified before the subcommittee: "During the last three months, with an expanded target list but no significant departure from the broad restraints under which we have long operated, we have begun to hurt the enemy in his home territory."

Officers say the latest raids near Hanoi reflect a policy decision to hammer harder at the important northeast sector, which contains key elements of the transportation system, industrial facilities and major military complexes such as training bases.

McConnell traced the evolution of the bombing campaign for senators Tuesday and asserted that without it the United States might have needed an additional 800,000 troops to cope with the Communist buildup.

The four-star general also gave a rare, official picture of what the attacks are doing to North Vietnam as a country, saying its economy "has undergone a decided change."

Due to damaged production and transportation facilities, export tonnage has dropped steadily since air strikes began in 1965, he said.

British Accuse China Of Uncivil Behavior

LONDON (AP) — The British Foreign Office accused the Communist Chinese today of breaking "all normal rules of civilized behavior" in burning the British diplomatic mission in Peking.

A spokesman said whether Britain maintains diplomatic relations with Red China depends entirely on "the attitude and behavior of the Chinese authorities."

Sources said a break in diplomatic relations did not appear imminent. But British officials imposed tight restrictions on the movement of Chinese diplomats in this country in retaliation for the burning of the building in Peking Tuesday.

Fifty-four members of the British mission, including dependents, were reported to have taken refuge in friendly embassies in Peking after rampaging Red Guards set fire to the building and beat staff members.

The British government reacted with swift anger over the incident in which British charge d'affaires, Donald Hopson, and nine other mission staff members were pummeled and humiliated in front of a screaming mob.

Britain charged that Mao Tse-tung's regime was behind the attack and linked it to Peking's campaign to harass British rule in the crown colony of Hong Kong.

Sources in Whitehall believed it unlikely, however, that the incident would prompt Britain to sever relations with China. One source said the Foreign Office "has learned not to react in pique." Another said the British will "sit tight."

The Foreign Office branded the attack "an outrageous and uncivilized act which would bring the Chinese government into disrepute throughout the world."

Summoning Chinese Charge d'Affaires Shen Ping, a Foreign Office official informed him that:

— All Chinese in Britain holding diplomatic or official passports must obtain exit visas from the Foreign Office before leaving Britain.

— All members of the Chinese diplomatic mission are restricted to travel within a radius of five miles from the center of London unless they give 48 hours notice.

— Permission to operate diplomatic radio transmissions by the Chinese mission is suspended until restrictions on the British diplomatic radio in Peking are lifted.

A day-long demonstration by more than 10,000 Red Guards in front of the British mission's office building exploded into violence with the expiration of a Chinese ultimatum demanding that the British release Communist newsmen arrested in the Hong Kong and withdraw action against pro-Communist newspapers.

The vote for the electrical utilities was: Ward I, 129 for, 44 against; ward II, 244, 22; ward III, 51, 32.

The vote for the gas utilities was: ward I, 129 for, 44 against; ward II, 247, 23; ward III, 54, 30.

The 20-year lease expires in a few months. The renewal also provides for a 20-year franchise with an option not to renew at the end of 10 years.

Train Blast Evacuates 6,000

TEXARKANA, Tex. (AP) — Explosions and fire erupted in four derailed chemical cars of a freight train today, forcing the evacuation of 6,000 persons in a 1½-mile area and injuring 10 persons.

The evacuations were ordered as a precaution against possible poisonous fumes from the chemicals.

Fire and police officials issued an all clear at 10 a.m. after the fire burned itself out and residents began returning to their homes.

Seven of the injured were Texarkana firemen and three were Red Cross workers who were called in to help care for the evacuees. The injured were taken to a hospital for emergency treatment of cuts and burns. None was believed seriously hurt.

The evacuees were moved into four school buildings and the Marine Corps Reserve Center.

The derailment occurred Tuesday night on the grounds of the International Creosote plant. The area is about two miles off U.S. 59 on the southwest edge of this city which straddles the Texas-Arkansas line.

Police said nine cars were derailed and four were on fire. All fire fighting equipment was moved back from the scene because of the possibility of more explosions.

One car was loaded with what the State Department of Public Safety called "a highly explosive chemical.'" Another contained nitric acid, another liquid plastic, one fertilizer and at least two held naphtha.

Cause of the derailment was not immediately determined.

TEENAGERS IN SUNSET began a painting and cleaning project today on Alabama Street. The group is working every day till school starts, and will then work after school in work parties to improve the appearances of the area.

CHARLES LAMBERT, left, and Johnnie Stewart began cutting weeds near a house at Alabama and North streets in Sunset today. The youths are participating in a project to improve the appearances of the area.

Work Project Begins

The first visible outgrowth of the plans proposed by Recovery Inc. and the Missourians, a group of young Negro leaders in Sunset, appeared today.

About 60 teenage boys and girls have volunteered to paint houses, cut weeds, dispose of trash and clean up the Sunset area, Carolyn Gardner, team captain of one group of girl workers, said.

Miss Gardner received several gallons of paint and some brushes today from Dr. Robert Lively, chairman of the Community Betterment Committee of Recovery Inc.

Dr. Lively said downtown merchants were contributing the paint and brushes. Shad Old, committee member, said that a surprising number of merchants and other concerned individuals were anxious to contribute materials to such a project.

The work is being done by the youths of Sunset. They have undertaken a crash program to completely clean up Alabama street, hopefully this week. They will then work on North street.

About 16 property owners have been contacted and are willing to allow the youths to paint their houses or the trimmings. Some houses could not be improved by paint alone, and the teenagers have no remedy for them. But they are clearing weeds and litter, where they find them.

City equipment including lawn mowers and dump trucks will be available for hauling trash on Saturdays.

The teenagers volunteered for the project when two members of the Missourians approached them this week. Lewis Wiggins and George Wolfe talked to the youths at the Sunset Improvement Club and about 60 volunteered.

Groups are divided into six boys or girls. Each group has a captain and a team leader to co-ordinate the work.

Although the youths are receiving no pay, they are anxious to do as much as they can, before school starts, Miss Gardner said.

But they plan to continue improving the area after school, next week. Long range plans have not been made, but the project is expected to continue for a month or more, Wolfe said.

A block party is planned for the group when they complete their work on Alabama street. Refreshments will be provided by the persons living on Alabama.

Wolfe was bringing rakes and cycles to the boys engaged in clearing a lot of weeds this morning. He said a city mower would arrive later today to cut the weeds shorter.

Bill Stokes, superintendent of the street department, met with one working group this morning and asked if he could bring them any other equipment. They requested some brooms.

The young men team captains are: Eddie Marshall, Dennis Snelling, Bobby Lambert, Johnnie Stewart, Otis Applewhite, Charles Lambert and Arthur Jackson.

Girl team captains are: Viola Blow, Gail Warfield, Elizabeth Geralds, Everlean Gipson and Pearl Grant.

Military Praise Backs Bombing

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. bombing of North Vietnam is effective and should be continued, Adm. T. H. Moorer, new chief of naval operations, testified today.

"Our air effort against North Vietnam is making a major contribution to the achievement of our objectives in South Vietnam," he said. "Now is certainly not the time to terminate, or decrease in any way, this pressure on the enemy.

Moorer, who took over as top naval officer Aug. 1, testified before a closed session of the Senate defense preparedness investigating subcommittee. Portions of his prepared testimony were released to newsmen.

His testimony backed the stand taken by other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and echoed a theme repeated by other generals and admirals: Bomb more while North Vietnam suffers.

Moorer said effectiveness of the air attacks has been enhanced recently "by the assignment of additional lucrative targets."

He did not elaborate, but U.S. planes have been hitting more often near Hanoi and along the Red Chinese border. This has led to indications the brunt of the attack may be shifting to the heavily defended, politically sensitive northeast quadrant of North Vietnam.

Moorer said the targets in North Vietnam are being hit with "almost surgical precision." Unusual accuracy and controls are needed, he said, to minimize "risk of expanding the war to include Communist China and the Soviet Union."

He said the precision is demonstrated in the destruction of specific bridges and power plants within what under other circumstances would be a military target complex.

The northeast area, which includes the vital railroad link with Communist China's weapons and munitions factories, is regarded as Hanoi's main base area for the war in South Vietnam.

In Saigon Tuesday Air Force spokesmen said the stepped-up attacks in the northeast are severely hurting North Vietnam's capacity for war, and a high-ranking officer declared:

"Hammer, hammer, hammer with everything you can because you know it hurts them. I know they're beaten. The question is: When are they going to quit?"

Meanwhile Gen. John P. McConnell, Air Force chief of staff, told the Senate Preparedness subcommittee examining the bombing campaign: "The cumulative effect of this increasing pressure by air has brought us to the point where we have begun to hurt the enemy in his home territory."

One week ago, Army Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was telling the same group the raids have resulted in "steady destruction of the country's physical infrastructure and deterioration of the national economy."

And on Aug. 9, Adm. Ulysses S. G. Sharp, Pacific commander in chief, testified before the subcommittee: "During the last three months, with an expanded target list but no significant departure from the broad restraints under which we have long operated, we have begun to hurt the enemy in his home territory."

Officers say the latest raids near Hanoi reflect a policy decision to hammer harder at the important northeast sector, which contains key elements of the transportation system, industrial facilities and major military complexes such as training bases.

McConnell traced the evolution of the bombing campaign for senators Tuesday and asserted that without it the United States might have needed an additional 800,000 troops to cope with the Communist buildup.

The four-star general also gave a rare, official picture of what the attacks are doing to North Vietnam as a country, saying its economy "has undergone a decided change."

Due to damaged production and transportation facilities, export tonnage has dropped steadily since air strikes began in 1965, he said.

British Accuse China Of Uncivil Behavior

LONDON (AP) — The British Foreign Office accused the Communist Chinese today of breaking "all normal rules of civilized behavior" in burning the British diplomatic mission in Peking.

A spokesman said whether Britain maintains diplomatic relations with Red China depends entirely on "the attitude and behavior of the Chinese authorities."

Sources said a break in diplomatic relations did not appear imminent. But British officials imposed tight restrictions on the movement of Chinese diplomats in this country in retaliation for the burning of the building in Peking Tuesday.

Fifty-four members of the British mission, including dependents, were reported to have taken refuge in friendly embassies in Peking after rampaging Red Guards set fire to the building and beat staff members.

The British government reacted with swift anger over the incident in which British charge d'affaires, Donald Hopson, and nine other mission staff members were pummeled and humiliated in front of a screaming mob.

Britain charged that Mao Tse-tung's regime was behind the attack and linked it to Peking's campaign to harass British rule in the crown colony of Hong Kong.

Sources in Whitehall believed it unlikely, however, that the incident would prompt Britain to sever relations with China. One source said the Foreign Office "has learned not to react in pique." Another said the British will "sit tight."

The Foreign Office branded the attack "an outrageous and uncivilized act which would bring the Chinese government into disrepute throughout the world."

Summoning Chinese Charge d'Affaires Shen Ping, a Foreign Office official informed him that:

— All Chinese in Britain holding diplomatic or official passports must obtain exit visas from the Foreign Office before leaving Britain.

— All members of the Chinese diplomatic mission are restricted to travel within a radius of five miles from the center of London unless they give 48 hours notice.

— Permission to operate diplomatic radio transmissions by the Chinese mission is suspended until restrictions on the British diplomatic radio in Peking are lifted.

A day-long demonstration by more than 10,000 Red Guards in front of the British mission's office building exploded into violence with the expiration of a Chinese ultimatum demanding that the British release Communist newsmen arrested in the Hong Kong and withdraw action against pro-Communist newspapers.

When Betty Furness was appointed President Lyndon B. Johnson's special assistant for consumer affairs it brightened our day.

To us it meant that an attractive woman would shop regularly for us and represent us in the councils of the mighty.

Every man needs a gal or two like that. There's nothing finer than having one or more attractive women representing the nation's consumers, holding the line on prices as well as keeping the rein on their own shapely figures.

Like the girls in the television adventure series, it has been comforting to know that Betty was right in there with her small spear slaying the inflationary and high cost dragons in the nation's supermarkets.

There were those who scoffed at her appointment, of course.

The debunkers implied that it was all a bit of fluff and that the chief executive had been carried away by our heroine's good looks and winning smile.

It is now our turn to remind these unbelievers that they were wrong. She has set a good example as a shopper.

Not content to just sit in her Washington, D.C., office, she has rolled up her sleeves and gone shopping in the marketplace.

There she found her newest husband -- Leslie G. Midgley, a television news producer.

Yes sir, when Betty discusses consumer problems. She knows what she is talking about. Not a bad looking fellow, either.

Secretary of Defense McNamara, who has been as repressive on the news media as the generals and admirals, has quietly lifted a restriction on the public's right to know which never should have been applied.

Under the regulation information and opinion at the Pentagon was restricted sharply.

The policy was inaugurated during the Cuban missile crisis in 1962.

It required that when Pentagon officials talked with reporters they either must have a monitor present or must file a full report, identify the reporter and the subjects discussed.

This retarded the flow of vital information to the American people although military officials and reporters found ways to circumvent it.

McNamara's memorandum terminating the restriction is interesting:

> "The department of defense has an obligation to guarantee that full and prompt information is made available to the American people on a basis for their understanding of national defense and the operation of this department."

Of course that is true but the explanation makes it appear that McNamara had just become aware of the fact.

The fight to give the American people the information they need to know to govern intelligently is unending and bureaucrats, such as McNamara, always are tempted to restrain the flow and to "doctor" the output to make it appear more favorable to them.

Second thoughts by a cabinet member may be in some ways desirable and better than none at all but they shouldn't be necessary on a basic principle of good government.

Uruguay, once the "Switzerland of Latin America", has in 15 years gone wild over the welfare state, according to an article in the April issue of Nation's Business magazine. It sent an editor to Uruguay to look over the land which in 15 years has fallen from the ranks of the most affluent and economically sound to the list of Western nations with the most critical ills and found that it is common for government workers to retire on nearly full pay when they are in their mid-40's. Welfare cheating is common. Uruguayans are aware of what is happening in their country and asked the Nation's Business editor, "Is this the way the United States is going, too?"

"Does your company emphasize product development or advertising?"

A top official of a leading wood manufacturer was perplexed when asked this question at a recent convention; his quick reply was:

"It would be useless for us to emphasize produce development without emphasizing advertising. No matter how good they are, we couldn't sell new products without increased advertising."

The more a manufacturer does to improve his line, the larger must be his advertising budget, the executive said. The rule holds from processing to the final retail sales.

Whether the businessman likes it or not, he happens to be operating in an era when change and improvement is expected by the consumer. But it is also the era when the consumer is more skeptical than ever of the claims of the seller.

The consumer wants new and better products. But he is sophisticated enough to know that not all changes are improvements, and that not all new things are better.

Yet, the consumer expects to hear the pitch for change. He considers it the responsibility of the seller to present his case. He is willing to listen; he wants to be convinced that he should invest in a new car, home laundry, television set, vacation trip, or a lake cabin.

But the affluent consumer expects to be courted. In a buyers' market such is his privilege. He expects advertising to sell him. He expects advertising to compete for his money. He trusts his judgment to make a buying decision on the basis of information presented in advertising.

The day of the "steady" consumer is gone -- for whole stores as well as individual products.

How do you compare with professional truck drivers in recognizing highway dangers?

Take the test below and find out. The test represents the opinions of professional truck drivers of the Spector Freight System, Inc., one of the nation's largest trucking firms. These pros ranked each driving error according to how frequently it was seen, its danger, and how likely it was to cause an accident.

You can do the same by rating each error from 1 to 13, using 1 to designate the worst blunder, 2 for the next and so on. But be prepared for some surprises.

. . . Failure to signal correctly.
. . . Speeding (too fast for conditions).
. . . Failure to heed traffic signs and signals.
. . . Tailgating.
. . . Driver unfit (driving while over tired; using alcohol, drugs; not using glasses).
. . . Unsafe or unfamiliar vehicles.
. . . Failure to yield right of way.
. . . Not leaving himself an "out" (an escape route for a potential accident situation seen ahead).
. . . Illegal or unsafe passing or turning.
. . . Not in control of vehicle.
. . . Not staying in proper lane.
. . . Not driving defensively (failure to see and understand possible dangers in time).
. . . Bad driving attitude.

Okay, if you're all done filling in your answers, let's see how the long-haul pros rated these faultes.

Not driving defensively, 1; speeding, 2; driver unfit, 3; bad driving attitude, 4; illegal passing, 5; not leaving an out, 6; failure to yield right of way, 7; not staying in proper lane, 8; failure to heed traffic signs, 9; tailgating, 10; incorrect signaling, 11; not in control of vehicle, 12; and unsafe vehicles, 13.

Some of these results may have surprised you, but don't let any of the nasty 13 catch you napping at the wheel.

BEWARE OF REGIMENTING PARAPHERNALIA

Vice President Humphrey told a gathering of farmers, short while ago, that: "Today the age of surpluses is all but gone. Next year will be a year for bringing a substantial part of our reserve acreage out of mothballs. The farmers of this nation will be called upon to expand production. This is . . . good news for our farmers, for our consumers, and for hungry people throughout the world."

Before coming to sanguine about future production miracles that will be expected of American agriculture, it should be remembered that the productivity of agriculture in the United States, just as in all other lines of endeavor, has rested upon adherence to the free market, private enterprise system. As inflation progresses, there is talk of wage and price controls and all the other paraphernalia of regimented systems that have brought starvation and ruin to other nations. It does not take a very long memory to recall the disruptions in supply and demand, the black markets, and the scarcities that were the consequence of previous attempts to impose police state type regulations on the American economy.

Wage and price controls are no remedy for inflation. They are a guarantee of scarcity.

ON RESISTING INFLATION

We have every sympathy for housewives who want lower food prices. However, we have a sneaking hunch that a little investigation would turn up some inconsistencies.

For instance, if you were to follow the picketing Mrs. Brown home you'd probably find her being met at the door by her seven-year-old Wilbur with the following utlimatum:

"Mommy, I just saw on television a Super Z-Ray Cannon that shoots genuine atomic warheads and it costs only $24.95. Will you buy me one, Mommy? It's only $24.95."

At the home of Mrs. Smith, the one who carried the sign demanding a cut in meat prices, there'd be a different demand, this from five-year-old Sissty: "I have been watchin' Uncle Zuk on the television and you know what? For only $39.95 you can buy me a Genuine Hollywood Screen Test Kit Including Hair Dye. And I want one."

Mrs. Jones, the lady who denounced high food prices for the reporters, on camera, is silent at dinner because Junior has the floor. Seems he has been looking at cars. He can get a Caramba, with bucket seats, four-on-the-floor, tachometer, stereo tape system and 440 inches of power, all for only $3,495 delivered. Or he can get a Palomino similarly equipped for only $3,695.

Since today's moppets get what they go after, there's a good chance that Wilbur, Sissy and Junior will end up with these things, and meanwhile, their mamas will do their utmost to stop inflation in food prices.

Maybe the men who run the groceries and supermarkets ought to make some changes in their advertising copy. We might suggest:

Super-steaks for Sizzling, only $2.98 a portion.

Milk With Built-in Glamor, only $1.89 a fifth.

All the Vegetables Your Family Can Eat in 1967, only $1,995.

Obviously nothing can be high-priced if it costs only a certain amount. And obviously nothing can be inflationary if it's priced at only so many dollars.

That's the only way of looking at it.

H. L. Hunt Says

If members of Congress and state legislatures should abolish the Electoral College with the direct vote plan of electing the President of the United States, they would be showing little veneration for the Founders of Freedom. These astute and far-seeing patriots, after many weeks of deliberation, debate and voting, wrote a Constitution which nurtured Republic USA, the greatest nation ever on earth.

The Congressional District Plan for reform of the Electoral College system will help guarantee and perpetuate what the Founders sought to achieve. The direct vote plan popularized with catch phrases would go a long way toward destroying their creation, in which they appear to the greatest students of government to have been "guided by Divine Providence." The U. S. Constitution was appraised by Gladstone a hundred years later as the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

Substitution of the Electoral College system with the direct vote would be abandonment of a fundamental tenet the authors of the Constitutions relied upon to establish our Nation as a Republic. Reform of our historic Electoral College system in an orderly manner, on the other hand, would win a resounding testimonial from the free world and even from communist nations to the workability of government within the framework of our Republic.

The direct vote would lead to a bigger, more powerful central government. The wise words of George Washington apply: "Government, like fire, is a dangerous servant and a fearful master." The Electoral College system is sound; it needs only to be wisely reformed. HLH.

Dirksen, Fighting For Constitutional Convention, Asks 'Whose Govt. Is This Anyway?'

If ever the word gladiator befitted anyone, it does justice and full flavor to Everett Dirksen. He fights eloquently. Yet he is tough. But during the toughest of his battles, on the labor front for example, I have seen him and powerful labor leaders talk to each other with animated respect.

In recent years he has campaigned against labor's increasing influence, and for an educational system in which students and educators could join in prayer if they wished. Now he feels strongly about the "one man, one vote" issue. I asked him why. Here is his reply:

By Everett Dirksen
U.S. Senator from Illinois

Washington, D.C.--The Preamble to the Constitution of the United States begins with the words: "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union" and for other purposes, "do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America." I wonder whether we can still honestly say, "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union"?

In 1964 the United States Supreme Court handed down its decision in the case of Reynolds vs. Simms. It dealt with the composition and apportionment of state legislatures. The decision was promptly tagged as "the one-man, one-vote" rule. Strangely enough the real significance of the decision became somewhat sidetracked.

The real issue was and is whether under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution states can be deprived of the power and the right to determine the composition of at least one branch of its legislature so that fair representation is provided to all area political subdivisions and interests in the state.

This court decision says in effect that, notwithstanding the provisions of the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution which reserves to the states and to the people the powers not expressly delegated by the federal government, the states must and shall comply with the clause in the Fourteenth Amendment which assures equal protection of the laws, and that in respect to apportionment of state legislatures this means that the basis for apportionment must be population and population alone.

One effect of the high court decision is that the one-man, one-vote principle is now sought to be applied to political subdivisions of the states. That is to say, that it should be applied to county boards, school boards, park boards and other elective bodies without regard to the many diverse factors which must be considered to achieve the objective of fair representation.

The mischief inherent in the court decision is bound to go on and on and sooner or later it must have attention by the Congress and the people.

A resolution providing a constitutional amendment to deal with this problem was submitted to the United States Senate and voted upon on April 20, 1966, and commanded a substantial majority of the votes of the Senate. In fact, the vote was 55 to 38. This, however, failed short by seven votes of the required two-thirds of the Senators who might be present and voting.

While the attempt to obtain Congressional approval of a constitutional amendment was underway, a parallel endeavor to have the necessary states petition the Congress for a Constitutional Convention for the purpose of submitting such an amendment was also underway. In fact, 32 of the necessary 34 states have already filed such applications. This right of the states to require the convening of a convention for the purpose of submitting amendments to the Constitution is guaranteed by Article V. This effort came under immediate attack.

In large part the arguments advanced against calling a constitutional convention were rather stuffy and invalid. It was said that it had never been done! As if there is no first for everything. It was said that it would open up a Pandora's box that would let out all of the Trojan horses. The very mixture of the metaphor indicates the bewilderment of the spokesman. It was said that it could wreck the Constitution. To that one might reply by saying that so could the court.

Every fantastic contention has been dreamed up to fortify the argument that the people cannot be entrusted with their own business. The very purpose of the second part of Article V of the Constitution was to assure the people that if a hostile Congress refused to submit amendments to the states, the people through their legislatures could petition Congress to do so and it was made mandatory. The Article states that the Congress "shall" call a convention on petition of the necessary number of states.

Alexander Hamilton, one of the framers, gave particular attention to this Article and pointed out that it was "peremptory" and that it left no discretion in the Congress with respect to calling a convention.

Whose government is this anyway? If it is not the government of, for, and by people, it is one of the single phenomena of our public life that candidates supplicate the people for their votes and, when elected to office, all too often promptly manifest an eloquent distruct of the people. Whenever the time comes that the people cannot be trusted with their own affairs it will be time to fold up the Republic and give the key back to the Indians.

The very people who framed the Constitution had no such timidity about going back to the people. The Constitution was ratified by the required number of states on July 2, 1788, within 11 months of its ratification 10 amendments were proposed, and within 26 months these were ratified and became a part of the Constitution. These were known as the Bill of Rights. What a lesson this should be to any self-appointed defenders of the faith who really have no faith in the people.

Twenty - five times the Constitution has been amended. These amendments include the Bill of Rights, the abolition of slavery, votes for women, prohibition, the repeal of prohibition, presidential succession, the poll tax and others.

When one watches the march of federalism, whether by court decree or executive ukase, one becomes acutely aware that the effort for a more perfect union has been stalemated and that retrogression has set in. If this trend continues, state lines will fade only to be recorded in the dusty files of Rand McNally. It is high time to find out from the people whether they approve of these encroachments on their powers. The most satisfactory way to ascertain the peoples' will is through a constitutional convention. We can then determine whether we can still honestly say: "We the people of the United States in order to form a more perfect Union. . . do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

NEW YORK (AP) — The statue of Buddha in the Waldorf Towers apartment looked unreal. Half-hiding the placid timeless face was a large blonde wig, tilted askew.

"I'm waiting for the hairdresser to come and fix it," said Carol Channing.

Rare indeed is the actress who creates one unforgettable role in the theater. Carol did it twice, scoring as Lorelei Lee in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" in 1949 and as Dolly Gallagher Levi in "Hello, Dolly!" in 1963.

Miss Channing made musical comedy history by bringing in $17,015,018 in 1,272 consecutive performances of "Dolly" on Broadway and on the road. It was a personal triumph for her as well as a financial triumph for producer David Merrick.

So when Hollywood decided to film the musical, whom did the title role go to? To Barbra Streisand.

The choice was a heavy blow to Carol, but she's too good a trouper to be bitter about it.

"Naturally, I was disappointed," she said. "But Barbra and I were always good friends. She's a creative person, and will do the role in her own way.

"It doesn't hurt me anymore. But I certainly did want to jump out the window at first."

But Carol has no immediate leisure for such nonproductive activities as defenestration.

She has six hour-long spectaculars to make for the ABC network. There are also two more films to do for producer Ross Hunter, for whom she costarred with Julie Andrews in "Thoroughly Modern Miller," another box-office hit.

Then, in 1970, she has a commitment to appear in another Broadway musical planned by Merrick. "No, I don't mind having my life planned so far ahead," said Carol.

"I like it. It's every actor's ambition to keep working. The busier anyone is the happier he is, and the more fun to be around.

"The only unhappy people are those who don't work, either because they don't have to or because they are bums."

This gal who has been called "the blitz blonde with the clown-doll eyes" has the air of a hoydenish kitten on stage. Off stage, she is just as warm and friendly, but her comic, flighty mannerisms are underlaid by a vein of seriousness. She is a wise as well as funny kitten.

She worked as a model, receptionist, and sales girl before achieving success. Today she values that success, and she values the happy family relationship she has with her husband and manager, Charles Franklin Lowe, and her son, Channing.

To her happiness consists "in keeping busy at the thing you are built to do.

"I believe you should find something to dedicate your life to— and then dedicate it, go all the way with it."

These are her likes:

"Bicycling in Central Park with my husband and son— vivid colors such as chrome yellows, bright reds and strong magentas— working with Julie Andrews— rainy weather— Monday night audiences, because they're always the best— cooking omelettes with my son— wearing massive pieces of novelty jewelry— the writings of Thornton Wilder -- any music with lyrics— swimming in the Pacific Ocean early in the morning— and painting portraits of people from the neck up with 10-cent pastel paints."

And these are her dislikes:

"Music without lyrics— getting stuck in elevators— alcoholic actors, because they can ruin your performance as well as their own— Saturday night audiences— and people who don't work at anything, and are therefore mean and resentful."

What does she think are her own worst faults?

"Being late to appointments, and dribbling food when I eat. Really, I should always wear an apron to the table."

WASHINGTON -- Following up his call for guerrilla warfare in the United States, Cuban dictator Fidel Castro is preparing to sneak a Negro revolutionary into the United States to direct the guerrilla movement.

An intelligence report identifies him as Robert Williams, who already has contacts among Negro extremists. It was Williams reportedly who arranged for Stokely Carmichael to go to Cuba.

Williams presumably will attempt to recruit other Negroes, who will be sent to Cuba by the same underground route -- VIA prague -- for guerrilla training.

Already Williams has smuggled thousands of incendiary leaflets into the United States, exhorting Negroes to take up weapons against the whites and giving do-it-yourself instructions in sabotage.

A former U.S. marine, Robert Williams became a Negro hero of sorts after he organized armed resistance to a Ku Klux Klan drive into the colored section of Monroe, N.C. He threw up a sandbag barricade, positioned his followers behind it, and ordered them to fire on the approaching Klansmen.

With a great flapping of white sheets, the Klansmen, though armed themselves, fled in panic. They prefer to terrorize defenseless Negroes.

During a subsequent race riot, Williams held a white couple in his home. He was charged with kidnapping, and escaped to Havana in August 1961, just a jump ahead of the FBI.

He has been shuttling between Havana and Peking ever since. The intelligence report claims he is now on his way back from China to head up Castro's U.S.-bound guerrillas.

CARDINAL TALKS POLITICS

Boston's colorful Richard Cardinal Cushing, the intimate friend and spiritual adviser to the Kennedy clan, has predicted privately that Sen. Robert Kennedy, D-N.Y., will never make it to the White House.

The difference between the late Jack Kennedy's successful campaign and Bobby Kennedy's prospects, the Cardinal explained to friends, is the illness of their father. Without old Joe Kennedy pulling wires in the back room, the Cardinal suggested, Bobby won't win the Presidency.

The prelate jovially recalled how he and old Joe, both hard-shell Catholics, made strategic contributions to protestant ministers in West Virginia to help win friends and influence voters for Jack Kennedy in the crucial 1960 West Virginia primary.

"We donated $200 to some, $500 to others -- and a few got $1,000 -- depending upon the size of their congregations," confessed the Cardinals, chuckling merrily.

TALCOTT AND TEAGUE

The plight of the migrant workers has been getting attention in the press lately, but it has received little attention from congress.

The powerful California and Texas delegations, with few exceptions, are lined up on the side of the big ranchers against their underpaid stoop laborers.

Two of the most vociferous champions of the ranchers are congressmen Burt Talcott and Charles Teague, both Republicans, who represent adjoining California districts. Teague's family owns Limoneira ranch, the world's largest lemon producer. Although Talcott is not himself a rancher, his law firm represents the packing and processing houses that do business with the ranchers.

Talcott and Teague have always stood together in the house, opposing curbs on the admission of cheap Mexican labor, favoring legislation that benefits the ranchers, crying out in angry duet against any infringement upon the feudal rule of the big ranch owners.

DOUGLAS DOUBLE-CROSSED

In a chat within this column, white-thatched Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas confirmed that he had been euchered out of the vice presidential nomination at the 1944 Democratic Conventio... The nomination went instead to Harry S. Truman, who succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt a year later as President. Douglas was told by Grace Tully, FDR's private secretary, that President Roosevelt had dictated a letter to the Chicago convention, saying he would accept either Douglas or Truman as his running mate. She said that Douglas's name had been listed first.

But Bob Hannegan, then Democratic national chairman, wanted Truman. Hannegan intercepted Roosevelt's letter and retyped it for release with Truman's name first. Thus the press and public got the idea that Truman was FDR's favorite, and the convention carried out history.

At a subsequent cocktail party, Douglas recalled, a beaming Hannegan came up to him.

"I guess we boxed you in," he said amiably.

"If I ever need a campaign manager," replied Douglas with equal good humor, "I'll call on you."

The recollection of how close he came to the Presidency, however, "has ground at Douglas all these years," says a friend. The rugged old jurist has hungered for the chance the Presidency would have given him possibly to maintain the historic Chinese - American friendship, thus averting the Korean and Vietnam wars.

He was in touch with Red Chinese leaders who persuaded him that they had no desire to be dominated by Russia. He always felt that China and Russia, facing each other across the world's longest border, inevitably would clash. He remains convinced that timely and friendly recognition of Red China would have kept the Chinese neutral and would have avoided two decades of crises in Asia.

Justice Douglas still hangs on to the hope that, somehow the pieces of the old Chinese - American friendship can be picked up. He obtained state department approval last year for a visit behind the Bamboo Curtain, but the Chinese never responded to his travel request. Earlier this year, despite the convulsion in China, he renewed his application.

When Betty Furness was appointed President Lyndon B. Johnson's special assistant for consumer affairs it brightened our day.

To us it meant that an attractive woman would shop regularly for us and represent us in the councils of the mighty.

Every man needs a gal or two like that. There's nothing finer than having one or more attractive women representing the nation's consumers, holding the line on prices as well as keeping the rein on their own shapely figures.

Like the girls in the television adventure series, it has been comforting to know that Betty was right in there with her small spear slaying the inflationary and high cost dragons in the nation's supermarkets.

There were those who scoffed at her appointment, of course.

The debunkers implied that it was all a bit of fluff and that the chief executive had been carried away by our heroine's good looks and winning smile.

It is now our turn to remind these unbelievers that they were wrong. She has set a good example as a shopper.

Not content to just sit in her Washington, D.C., office, she has rolled up her sleeves and gone shopping in the marketplace.

There she found her newest husband -- Leslie G. Midgley, a television news producer.

Yes sir, when Betty discusses consumer problems. She knows what she is talking about.

Not a bad looking fellow, either.

Secretary of Defense McNamara, who has been as repressive on the news media as the generals and admirals, has quietly lifted a restriction on the public's right to know which never should have been applied.

Under the regulation information and opinion at the Pentagon was restricted sharply.

The policy was inaugurated during the Cuban missile crisis in 1962.

It required that when Pentagon officials talked with reporters they either must have a monitor present or must file a full report, identify the reporter and the subjects discussed.

This retarded the flow of vital information to the American people although military officials and reporters found ways to circumvent it.

McNamara's memorandum terminating the restriction is interesting:

> "The department of defense has an obligation to guarantee that full and prompt information is made available to the American people on a basis for their understanding of national defense and the operation of this department."

Of course that is true but the explanation makes it appear that McNamara had just become aware of the fact.

The fight to give the American people the information they need to know to govern intelligently is unending and bureaucrats, such as McNamara, always are tempted to restrain the flow and to "doctor" the output to make it appear more favorable to them.

Second thoughts by a cabinet member may be in some ways desirable and better than none at all but they shouldn't be necessary on a basic principle of good government.

Uruguay, once the "Switzerland of Latin America", has in 15 years gone wild over the welfare state, according to an article in the April issue of Nation's Business magazine. It sent an editor to Uruguay to look over the land which in 15 years has fallen from the ranks of the most affluent and economically sound to the list of Western nations with the most critical ills and found that it is common for government workers to retire on nearly full pay when they are in their mid-40's. Welfare cheating is common. Uruguayans are aware of what is happening in their country and asked the Nation's Business editor, "Is this the way the United States is going, too?"

"Does your company emphasize product development or advertising?"

A top official of a leading wood manufacturer was perplexed when asked this question at a recent convention; his quick reply was:

"It would be useless for us to emphasize produce development without emphasizing advertising. No matter how good they are, we couldn't sell new products without increased advertising."

The more a manufacturer does to improve his line, the larger must be his advertising budget, the executive said. The rule holds from processing to the final retail sales.

Whether the businessman likes it or not, he happens to be operating in an era when change and improvement is expected by the consumer. But it is also the era when the consumer is more skeptical than ever of the claims of the seller.

The consumer wants new and better products. But he is sophisticated enough to know that not all changes are improvements, and that not all new things are better.

Yet, the consumer expects to hear the pitch for change. He considers it the responsibility of the seller to present his case. He is willing to listen; he wants to be convinced that he should invest in a new car, home laundry, television set, vacation trip, or a lake cabin.

But the affluent consumer expects to be courted. In a buyers' market such is his privilege. He expects advertising to sell him. He expects advertising to compete for his money. He trusts his judgment to make a buying decision on the basis of information presented in advertising.

The day of the "steady" consumer is gone -- for whole stores as well as individual products.

How do you compare with professional truck drivers in recognizing highway dangers?

Take the test below and find out. The test represents the opinions of professional truck drivers of the Spector Freight System, Inc., one of the nation's largest trucking firms. These pros ranked each driving error according to how frequently it was seen, its danger, and how likely it was to cause an accident.

You can do the same by rating each error from 1 to 13, using 1 to designate the worst blunder, 2 for the next and so on. But be prepared for some surprises.

. . . Failure to signal correctly.
. . . Speeding (too fast for conditions).
. . . Failure to heed traffic signs and signals.
. . . Tailgating.
. . . Driver unfit (driving while over tired; using alcohol, drugs; not using glasses).
. . . Unsafe or unfamiliar vehicles.
. . . Failure to yield right of way.
. . . Not leaving himself an "out" (an escape route for a potential accident situation seen ahead).
. . . Illegal or unsafe passing or turning.
. . . Not in control of vehicle.
. . . Not staying in proper lane.
. . . Not driving defensively (failure to see and understand possible dangers in time).
. . . Bad driving attitude.

Okay, if you're all done filling in your answers, let's see how the long-haul pros rated these faultes.

Not driving defensively, 1; speeding, 2; driver unfit, 3; bad driving attitude, 4; illegal passing, 5; not leaving an out, 6; failure to yield right of way, 7; not staying in proper lane, 8; failure to heed traffic signs, 9; tailgating, 10; incorrect signaling, 11; not in control of vehicle, 12; and unsafe vehicles, 13.

Some of these results may have surprised you, but don't let any of the nasty 13 catch you napping at the wheel.

BEWARE OF REGIMENTING PARAPHERNALIA

Vice President Humphrey told a gathering of farmers, short while ago, that: "Today the age of surpluses is all but gone. Next year will be a year for bringing a substantial part of our reserve acreage out of mothballs. The farmers of this nation will be called upon to expand production. This is . . . good news for our farmers, for our consumers, and for hungry people throughout the world."

Before coming to sanguine about future production miracles that will be expected of American agriculture, it should be remembered that the productivity of agriculture in the United States, just as in all other lines of endeavor, has rested upon adherence to the free market, private enterprise system. As inflation progresses, there is talk of wage and price controls and all the other paraphernalia of regimented systems that have brought starvation and ruin to other nations. It does not take a very long memory to recall the disruptions in supply and demand, the black markets, and the scarcities that were the consequence of previous attempts to impose police state type regulations on the American economy.

Wage and price controls are no remedy for inflation. They are a guarantee of scarcity.

ON RESISTING INFLATION

We have every sympathy for housewives who want lower food prices. However, we have a sneaking hunch that a little investigation would turn up some inconsistencies.

For instance, if you were to follow the picketing Mrs. Brown home you'd probably find her being met at the door by her seven-year-old Wilbur with the following utlimatum:

"Mommy, I just saw on television a Super Z-Ray Cannon that shoots genuine atomic warheads and it costs only $24.95. Will you buy me one, Mommy? It's only $24.95."

At the home of Mrs. Smith, the one who carried the sign demanding a cut in meat prices, there'd be a different demand, this from five-year-old Sissty:

"I have been watchin' Uncle Zuk on the television and you know what? For only $39.95 you can buy me a Genuine Hollywood Screen Test Kit Including Hair Dye. And I want one."

Mrs. Jones, the lady who denounced high food prices for the reporters, on camera, is silent at dinner because Junior has the floor. Seems he has been looking at cars. He can get a Caramba, with bucket seats, four-on-the-floor, tachometer, stereo tape system and 440 inches of power, all for only $3,495 delivered. Or he can get a Palomino similarly equipped for only $3,695.

Since today's moppets get what they go after, there's a good chance that Wilbur, Sissy and Junior will end up with these things, and meanwhile, their mamas will do their utmost to stop inflation in food prices.

Maybe the men who run the groceries and supermarkets ought to make some changes in their advertising copy. We might suggest:

Super-steaks for Sizzling, only $2.98 a portion.

Milk With Built-in Glamor, only $1.89 a fifth.

All the Vegetables Your Family Can Eat in 1967, only $1,995.

Obviously nothing can be high-priced if it costs only a certain amount. And obviously nothing can be inflationary if it's priced at only so many dollars.

That's the only way of looking at it.

H. L. Hunt Says

If members of Congress and state legislatures should abolish the Electoral College with the direct vote plan of electing the President of the United States, they would be showing little veneration for the Founders of Freedom. These astute and far-seeing patriots, after many weeks of deliberation, debate and voting, wrote a Constitution which nurtured Republic USA, the greatest nation ever on earth.

The Congressional District Plan for reform of the Electoral College system will help guarantee and perpetuate what the Founders sought to achieve. The direct vote plan popularized with catch phrases would go a long way toward destroying their creation, in which they appear to the greatest students of government to have been "guided by Divine Providence." The U. S. Constitution was appraised by Gladstone a hundred years later as the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

Substitution of the Electoral College system with the direct vote would be abandonment of a fundamental tenet the authors of the Constitutions relied upon to establish our Nation as a Republic. Reform of our historic Electoral College system in an orderly manner, on the other hand, would win a resounding testimonial from the free world and even from communist nations to the workability of government within the framework of our Republic.

The direct vote would lead to a bigger, more powerful central government. The wise words of George Washington apply: "Government, like fire, is a dangerous servant and a fearful master." The Electoral College system is sound; it needs only to be wisely reformed. HLH.

Dirksen, Fighting For Constitutional Convention, Asks 'Whose Govt. Is This Anyway?'

If ever the word gladiator befitted anyone, it does justice and full flavor to Everett Dirksen. He fights eloquently. Yet he is tough. But during the toughest of his battles, on the labor front for example, I have seen him and powerful labor leaders talk to each other with animated respect.

In recent years he has campaigned against labor's increasing influence, and for an educational system in which students and educators could join in prayer if they wished. Now he feels strongly about the "one man, one vote" issue. I asked him why. Here is his reply:

By Everett Dirksen
U.S. Senator from Illinois

Washington, D.C.--The Preamble to the Constitution of the United States begins with the words: "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union" and for other purposes, "do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America." I wonder whether we can still honestly say, "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union"?

In 1964 the United States Supreme Court handed down its decision in the case of Reynolds vs. Simms. It dealt with the composition and apportionment of state legislatures. The decision was promptly tagged as "the one-man, one-vote" rule. Strangely enough the real significance of the decision became somewhat sidetracked.

The real issue was and is whether under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution states can be deprived of the power and the right to determine the composition of at least one branch of its legislature so that fair representation is provided to all area political subdivisions and interests in the state.

This court decision says in effect that, notwithstanding the provisions of the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution which reserves to the states and to the people the powers not expressly delegated by the federal government, the states must and shall comply with the clause in the Fourteenth Amendment which assures equal protection of the laws, and that in respect to apportionment of state legislatures this means that the basis for apportionment must be population and population alone.

One effect of the high court decision is that the one-man, one-vote principle is now sought to be applied to political subdivisions of the states. That is to say, that it should be applied to county boards, school boards, park boards and other elective bodies without regard to the many diverse factors which must be considered to achieve the objective of fair representation.

The mischief inherent in the court decision is bound to go on and on and sooner or later it must have attention by the Congress and the people.

A resolution providing a constitutional amendment to deal with this problem was submitted to the United States Senate and voted upon on April 20, 1966, and commanded a substantial majority of the votes of the Senate. In fact, the vote was 55 to 38. This, however, failed short by seven votes of the required two-thirds of the Senators who might be present and voting.

While the attempt to obtain Congressional approval of a constitutional amendment was underway, a parallel endeavor to have the necessary states petition the Congress for a Constitutional Convention for the purpose of submitting such an amendment was also underway. In fact, 32 of the necessary 34 states have already filed such applications. This right of the states to require the convening of a convention for the purpose of submitting amendments to the Constitution is guaranteed by Article V. This effort came under immediate attack.

In large part the arguments advanced against calling a constitutional convention were rather stuffy and invalid. It was said that it had never been done! As if there is no first for everything. It was said that it would open up a Pandora's box that would let out all of the Trojan horses. The very mixture of the metaphor indicates the bewilderment of the spokesman. It was said that it could wreck the Constitution. To that one might reply by saying that so could the court.

Every fantastic contention has been dreamed up to fortify the argument that the people cannot be entrusted with their own business. The very purpose of the second part of Article V of the Constitution was to assure the people that if a hostile Congress refused to submit amendments to the states, the people through their legislatures could petition Congress to do so and it was made mandatory. The Article states that the Congress "shall" call a convention on petition of the necessary number of states.

Alexander Hamilton, one of the framers, gave particular attention to this Article and pointed out that it was "peremptory" and that it left no discretion in the Congress with respect to calling a convention.

Whose government is this anyway? If it is not the government of, for, and by people, it is one of the single phenomena of our public life that candidates supplicate the people for their votes and, when elected to office, all too often promptly manifest an eloquent distruct of the people. Whenever the time comes that the people cannot be trusted with their own affairs it will be time to fold up the Republic and give the key back to the Indians.

The very people who framed the Constitution had no such timidity about going back to the people. The Constitution was ratified by the required number of states on July 2, 1788, within 11 months of its ratification 10 amendments were proposed, and within 26 months these were ratified and became a part of the Constitution. These were known as the Bill of Rights. What a lesson this should be to any self-appointed defenders of the faith who really have no faith in the people.

Twenty - five times the Constitution has been amended. These amendments include the Bill of Rights, the abolition of slavery, votes for women, prohibition, the repeal of prohibition, presidential succession, the poll tax and others.

When one watches the march of federalism, whether by court decree or executive ukase, one becomes acutely aware that the effort for a more perfect union has been stalemated and that retrogression has set in. If this trend continues, state lines will fade only to be recorded in the dusty files of Rand McNally. It is high time to find out from the people whether they approve of these encroachments on their powers. The most satisfactory way to ascertain the peoples' will is through a constitutional convention. We can then determine whether we can still honestly say: "We the people of the United States in order to form a more perfect Union. . . do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

NEW YORK (AP) — The statue of Buddha in the Waldorf Towers apartment looked unreal. Half-hiding the placid timeless face was a large blonde wig, tilted askew.

"I'm waiting for the hairdresser to come and fix it," said Carol Channing.

Rare indeed is the actress who creates one unforgettable role in the theater. Carol did it twice, scoring as Lorelei Lee in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" in 1949 and as Dolly Gallagher Levi in "Hello, Dolly!" in 1963.

Miss Channing made musical comedy history by bringing in $17,015,018 in 1,272 consecutive performances of "Dolly" on Broadway and on the road. It was a personal triumph for her as well as a financial triumph for producer David Merrick.

So when Hollywood decided to film the musical, whom did the title role go to? To Barbra Streisand.

The choice was a heavy blow to Carol, but she's too good a trouper to be bitter about it.

"Naturally, I was disappointed," she said. "But Barbra and I were always good friends. She's a creative person, and will do the role in her own way.

"It doesn't hurt me anymore. But I certainly did want to jump out the window at first."

But Carol has no immediate leisure for such nonproductive activities as defenestration.

She has six hour-long spectaculars to make for the ABC network. There are also two more films to do for producer Ross Hunter, for whom she costarred with Julie Andrews in "Thoroughly Modern Miller," another box-office hit.

Then, in 1970, she has a commitment to appear in another Broadway musical planned by Merrick. "No, I don't mind having my life planned so far ahead," said Carol.

"I like it. It's every actor's ambition to keep working. The busier anyone is the happier he is, and the more fun to be around.

"The only unhappy people are those who don't work, either because they don't have to or because they are bums."

This gal who has been called "the blitz blonde with the clown-doll eyes" has the air of a hoydenish kitten on stage. Off stage, she is just as warm and friendly, but her comic, flighty mannerisms are underlaid by a vein of seriousness. She is a wise as well as funny kitten.

She worked as a model, receptionist, and sales girl before achieving success. Today she values that success, and she values the happy family relationship she has with her husband and manager, Charles Franklin Lowe, and her son, Channing.

To her happiness consists "in keeping busy at the thing you are built to do.

"I believe you should find something to dedicate your life to—and then dedicate it, go all the way with it."

These are her likes:

"Bicycling in Central Park with my husband and son—vivid colors such as chrome yellows, bright reds and strong magentas—working with Julie Andrews—rainy weather—Monday night audiences, because they're always the best—cooking omelettes with my son—wearing massive pieces of novelty jewelry—the writings of Thornton Wilder -- any music with lyrics—swimming in the Pacific Ocean early in the morning—and painting portraits of people from the neck up with 10-cent pastel paints."

And these are her dislikes:

"Music without lyrics—getting stuck in elevators—alcoholic actors, because they can ruin your performance as well as their own—Saturday night audiences—and people who don't work at anything, and are therefore mean and resentful."

What does she think are her own worst faults?

"Being late to appointments, and dribbling food when I eat. Really, I should always wear an apron to the table."

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON -- Following up his call for guerrilla warfare in the United States, Cuban dictator Fidel Castro is preparing to sneak a Negro revolutionary into the United States to direct the guerrilla movement.

An intelligence report identifies him as Robert Williams, who already has contacts among Negro extremists. It was Williams reportedly who arranged for Stokely Carmichael to go to Cuba.

Williams presumably will attempt to recruit other Negroes, who will be sent to Cuba by the same underground route -- VIA prague -- for guerrilla training.

Already Williams has smuggled thousands of incendiary leaflets into the United States, exhorting Negroes to take up weapons against the whites and giving do-it-yourself instructions in sabotage.

A former U.S. marine, Robert Williams became a Negro hero of sorts after he organized armed resistance to a Ku Klux Klan drive into the colored section of Monroe, N.C. He threw up a sandbag barricade, positioned his followers behind it, and ordered them to fire on the approaching Klansmen.

With a great flapping of white sheets, the Klansmen, though armed themselves, fled in panic. They prefer to terrorize defenseless Negroes.

During a subsequent race riot, Williams held a white couple in his home. He was charged with kidnapping, and escaped to Havana in August 1961, just a jump ahead of the FBI.

He has been shuttling between Havana and Peking ever since. The intelligence report claims he is now on his way back from China to head up Castro's U.S.-bound guerrillas.

CARDINAL TALKS POLITICS

Boston's colorful Richard Cardinal Cushing, the intimate friend and spiritual adviser to the Kennedy clan, has predicted privately that Sen. Robert Kennedy, D-N.Y., will never make it to the White House.

The difference between the late Jack Kennedy's successful campaign and Bobby Kennedy's prospects, the Cardinal explained to friends, is the illness of their father. Without old Joe Kennedy pulling wires in the back room, the Cardinal suggested, Bobby won't win the Presidency.

The prelate jovially recalled how he and old Joe, both hard-shell Catholics, made strategic contributions to protestant ministers in West Virginia to help win friends and influence voters for Jack Kennedy in the crucial 1960 West Virginia primary.

"We donated $200 to some, $500 to others -- and a few got $1,000 -- depending upon the size of their congregations," confessed the Cardinals, chuckling merrily.

TALCOTT AND TEAGUE

The plight of the migrant workers has been getting attention in the press lately, but it has received little attention from congress.

The powerful California and Texas delegations, with few exceptions, are lined up on the side of the big ranchers against their underpaid stoop laborers.

Two of the most vociferous champions of the ranchers are congressmen Burt Talcott and Charles Teague, both Republicans, who represent adjoining California districts. Teague's family owns Limoneira ranch, the world's largest lemon producer. Although Talcott is not himself a rancher, his law firm represents the packing and processing houses that do business with the ranchers.

Talcott and Teague have always stood together in the house, opposing curbs on the admission of cheap Mexican labor, favoring legislation that benefits the ranchers, crying out in angry duet against any infringement upon the feudal rule of the big ranch owners.

DOUGLAS DOUBLE-CROSSED

In a chat within this column, white-thatched Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas confirmed that he had been euchered out of the vice presidential nomination at the 1944 Democratic Convention. The nomination went instead to Harry S. Truman, who succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt a year later as President.

Douglas was told by Grace Tully, FDR's private secretary, that President Roosevelt had dictated a letter to the Chicago convention, saying he would accept either Douglas or Truman as his running mate. She said that Douglas's name had been listed first.

But Bob Hannegan, then Democratic national chairman, wanted Truman. Hannegan intercepted Roosevelt's letter and retyped it for release with Truman's name first. Thus the press and public got the idea that Truman was FDR's favorite, and the convention carried out history.

At a subsequent cocktail party, Douglas recalled, a beaming Hannegan came up to him.

"I guess we boxed you in," he said amiably.

"If I ever need a campaign manager," replied Douglas with equal good humor, "I'll call on you."

The recollection of how close he came to the Presidency, however, "has ground at Douglas all these years," says a friend. The rugged old jurist has hungered for the chance the Presidency would have given him possibly to maintain the historic Chinese - American friendship, thus averting the Korean and Vietnam wars.

He was in touch with Red Chinese leaders who persuaded him that they had no desire to be dominated by Russia. He always felt that China and Russia, facing each other across the world's longest border, inevitably would clash. He remains convinced that timely and friendly recognition of Red China would have kept the Chinese neutral and would have avoided two decades of crises in Asia.

Justice Douglas still hangs on to the hope that, somehow the pieces of the old Chinese - American friendship can be picked up. He obtained state department approval last year for a visit behind the Bamboo Curtain, but the Chinese never responded to his travel request. Earlier this year, despite the convulsion in China, he renewed his application.

No male beauty contest has ever been recorded, but for more than two centuries Englishmen could--and did--compete in male ugliness contests. These "grinning matches," as they were called, enlivened country fairs and city holiday celebrations. Grinning meant grimacing, and a match was actually a contest in making faces. For added effect, contestants stuck their head through a horse collar. The prize was often a gold-or silver-laced hat, or other equally valuable trophy. In 1711 an important horse-race meeting advertised "a Gold Ring to be Grinn'd for" as an extra attraction. The nation's leading essayist, Joseph Addison, thereupon grew solemn about the whole idea. It was, he wrote, "an affront to the human species to treat in this manner the Human Face Divine." The grinning match nevertheless went right on being popular at English folk frolics until well into the current century, becoming extinct, by coincidence, just when the horse collar was vanishing from modern civilization.

" 'Tis a far, far bettaire zing I do
Zan I have done before,"
Says Pierre Pan, mad cameraman,
And swings his boom much lower.

The special blade, his own brainchild.
Looms out his camera's brow--
A horizontal guillotine
On its fell swoop enow.

Pierre just pans the panel twice
(Once extra for the viewer):
Four panel members' torsos sit
Four clever heads the fewer!

And folk at sets throughout the land
Look grim and drink and sup
While waiting for that nut Pierre
To pull his picture up.

For this mess I missed Morpheus?

No male beauty contest has ever been recorded, but for more than two centuries Englishmen could--and did--compete in male ugliness contests. These "grinning matches," as they were called, enlivened country fairs and city holiday celebrations. Grinning meant grimacing, and a match was actually a contest in making faces. For added effect, contestants stuck their head through a horse collar. The prize was often a gold-or silver-laced hat, or other equally valuable trophy. In 1711 an important horse-race meeting advertised "a Gold Ring to be Grinn'd for" as an extra attraction. The nation's leading essayist, Joseph Addison, thereupon grew solemn about the whole idea. It was, he wrote, "an affront to the human species to treat in this manner the Human Face Divine." The grinning match nevertheless went right on being popular at English folk frolics until well into the current century, becoming extinct, by coincidence, just when the horse collar was vanishing from modern civilization.

I shall not waste my days in trying to prolong them. I shall use my time."

Says Pierre Pan, mad cameraman,
And swings his boom much lower.

The special blade, his own brainchild.
Looms out his camera's brow--
A horizontal guillotine
On its fell swoop enow.

Pierre just pans the panel twice
(Once extra for the viewer):
Four panel members' torsos sit
Four clever heads the fewer!

And folk at sets throughout the land
Look grim and drink and sup
While waiting for that nut Pierre
To pull his picture up.

To jot down gems that will not keep,
Quite sure the world I will astound

For this mess I missed Morpheus?

One Christmas I visited a friend who has eight children. As we picked our way through the cluttered living room he said, "To many people certain sounds are synbolic of Christmas--the tinkle of bells, carol singing, the shouts of happy children. To me it's the unceasing crunch, crunch, crunch of plastic toys."

What's home? . . . It was something to be proud of and to get back to for 18 happy and proud young athletes last night.

These athletes, the 1967 Sikeston Potlatch Foresters, were infected with happiness on their arrival at Moores Warehouse, east of town on highway 61.

Cars honked, bells rang, police sirens roared, and tears flew as they stepped off their chartered Greyhound bus. Loaded into convertibles, a 50 car motorcade proceeded west on Highway 61, through downtown streets and back to the VFW stadium, where the high school band struck up the "Washington Lee Swing," better known around SHS as "There's a Sikeston Boy," while the team was escorted on to the field in cars.

"Team members and coaches, welcome home. On behalf of everyone, we are proud of you." These were the first words of congratulations spoken as City Manager, W. Raymert Miller, praised the boys for a job well done.

Bill Porter, manager of Potlatch Forest Inc., complimented the squad by saying that if he could send a group of men across the United States to represent Sikeston, this is the type he would want to send.

The team won the Black River league, state, midwest and Southern Plains regional titles before losing two games in the Little World Series at Farmington, N. M., to Bridgeport, Conn., and Long Beach, Calif., with a single victory over Nashville.

The boys did not return to Sikeston after winning the regional at Lamar, Colo.

The coach and taskmaster of the team, N. P. McDaniel, stepped to the microphone last night and coolly and calmly commented: "It's a pleasure to be home. Whatever we did, it was entirely a team effort. We appreciated the telegrams and support from back home and were proud to represent you."

McDaniels introduced each team member and accepted comments from any of them. Wayne Limbaugh said:

"It was great coaching all the way through."

Mike Garner voiced: "It is good to be home to football."

Ed Felker announced: "When we got to the World Series in Farmington, the people were nice but none of them compared to Sikeston."

Terry Brown said: "I just hope we can do it again next year."

Before turning the microphone back to the KMPL Radio master of ceremonies, McDaniels said that the officials of the Connie Mack Tournament in Colorado said that they would like to hold the regional tournament here next year if the city of Sikeston wanted it.

Together with a standing ovation a simultaneous shout from the crowd roared:

"We do."

"WELCOME HOME" was the response from the crowd as the Southern Plains regional champions Connie Mack baseball team unloaded from their bus last night at Moores Warehouse, east of town on Highway 61.

THE BEGINNING of the 50 car motorcade awaits the return of the Sikeston Potlatch Foresters. The eight convertibles in the foreground transported the team through the downtown streets and onto the field at VFW stadium.

Cards Halt Game Skid With 9-0 Win

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

St. Louis has been cashing in on last year's Orlando Cepeda-Ray Sadecki swap for a long while, but Cepeda still won't let the San Francisco Giants off the hook.

The slugging first baseman tagged Sadecki for a run-scoring single and a three-run homer Tuesday night, backing Nelson Briles' four-hit pitching and powering the National League-leading Cardinals to a 9-0 romp over the Giants.

Cepeda, dealt from San Francisco to the Cards in May, 1966, for southpaw Sadecki, went 3-for-5 against the Giants and boosted his batting mark to .344 — only two points short of league leader Roberto Clemente of Pittsburgh.

Sadecki, meanwhile, lasted 4 1-3 innings, committed an error, wild-pitched two runs home and wound up with his fifth loss in 10 decisions.

In other NL action Philadelphia swept a doubleheader from the New York Mets 2-0 and 11-4; Cincinnati trimmed Los Angeles 4-1; Chicago drubbed Pittsburgh 8-1 and Houston spanked Atlanta 4-1.

The Cardinals, who had dropped two in a row, jumped on Sadecki for three runs in the first inning and finished him in the fifth on Julian Javier's single, the pitcher's fielding error and Cepeda's 22nd homer.

Javier, who also had three hits, clubbed a three-run homer off reliever Bob Bolin in the sixth and ex-relief pitcher Briles breezed to his first shutout and eighth victory in 13 decisions.

Larry Jackson, beaten by the Mets last week after reeling off 18 straight victories at their expense, started a new string in the nightcap at New York as Rich Allen paced a 14-hit assault with his 22nd and 23rd homers.

Rick Wise blanked the Mets on seven hits in the first game while Bill White's RBI single in the fourth and Tony Gonzalez' ninth inning homer won it for the Phillies.

Milt Pappas, who had shut out Los Angeles in two previous meetings, blanked them on six hits until Al Ferrara homered in the ninth and picked up his 13th victory against eight losses. Pete Rose keyed the Reds' attack against loser Don Drysdale with a double and run-scoring triple.

Joe Niekro scattered 11 Pittsburgh hits and doubled in three runs to lead the Cubs past the Pirates and left-hander Bob Veale. Billy Williams hit his 19th homer as the Cubs snapped Pittsburgh's winning streak at five games.

The Astros stretched Atlanta's losing string to five behind the six-hit pitching of Dave Giusti. Singles by Joe Morgan, Bob Aspromonte and Ron Brand plus an infield out produced two runs in the second inning, propelling Houston to its third straight victory.

Connie Mack Finals Thurs.

FARMINGTON, N. M. (AP)— Through luck of the draw, Portland, Ore., has a spot in the finals of the Connie Mack baseball world series while Flint, Mich., and Long Beach, Calif., have to battle each other to stay in the meet.

Each of the three teams ended Tuesday's play with one loss as host Farmington dropped out with a 5-2 loss to Portland.

The draw gave Portland a bye into the finals and a day of rest today while Flint and Long Okach play tonight.

The championship game will be Thursday.

Johnson In Army Green

FT. SILL, Okla. (AP) — Charley Johnson, who a season ago was piloting the St. Louis Cardinals at quarterback, was an Army man toda as he began two years' active duty as a first lieutenant.

Johnson arrived at this artillery-missile center early Tuesday afternoon to begin a nine-week field artillery officer basic course.

Johnson will then go to the Langley Research Center, Hampton, Va., where he'll work with the Army element with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The 28-year-old Cards' star is an Army reserve officer called to active duty.

Johnson was injured last season after guiding the Cardinals to a 6-1 won-lost record. They finished 8-5-1 in the National Football League.

Johnson said he would know within a few days if he would be able to play intraservice football, but he said chances were good that he would.

Cards Halt Game Skid With 9-0 Win

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

St. Louis has been cashing in on last year's Orlando Cepeda-Ray Sadecki swap for a long while, but Cepeda still won't let the San Francisco Giants off the hook.

The slugging first baseman tagged Sadecki for a run-scoring single and a three-run homer Tuesday night, backing Nelson Briles' four-hit pitching and powering the National League leading Cardinals to a 9-0 romp over the Giants.

Cepeda, dealt from San Francisco to the Cards in May, 1966, for southpaw Sadecki, went 3-for-5 against the Giants and boosted his batting mark to .344 — only two points short of league leader Roberto Clemente of Pittsburgh.

Sadecki, meanwhile, lasted 4 1-3 innings, committed an error, wild-pitched two runs home and wound up with his fifth loss in 10 decisions.

In other NL action Philadelphia swept a doubleheader from the New York Mets 2-0 and 11-4; Cincinnati trimmed Los Angeles 4-1; Chicago drubbed Pittsburgh 8-1 and Houston spanked Atlanta 4-1.

The Cardinals, who had dropped two in a row, jumped on Sadecki for three runs in the first inning and finished him in the fifth on Julian Javier's single, the pitcher's fielding error and Cepeda's 22nd homer.

Javier, who also had three hits, clubbed a three-run homer off reliever Bob Bolin in the sixth and ex-relief pitcher Briles breezed to his first shutout and eighth victory in 13 decisions.

Larry Jackson, beaten by the Mets last week after reeling off 18 straight victories at their expense, started a new string in the nightcap at New York as Rich Allen paced a 14-hit assault with his 22nd and 23rd homers.

Rick Wise blanked the Mets on seven hits in the first game while Bill White's RBI single in the fourth and Tony Gonzalez' ninth inning homer won it for the Phillies.

Milt Pappas, who had shut out Los Angeles in two previous meetings, blanked them on six hits until Al Ferrara homered in the ninth and picked up his 13th victory against eight losses. Pete Rose keyed the Reds' attack against loser Don Drysdale with a double and run-scoring triple.

Joe Niekro scattered 11 Pittsburgh hits and doubled in three runs to lead the Cubs past the Pirates and left-hander Bob Veale. Billy Williams hit his 19th homer as the Cubs snapped Pittsburgh's winning streak at five games.

The Astros stretched Atlanta's losing string to five behind the six-hit pitching of Dave Giusti. Singles by Joe Morgan, Bob Aspromonte and Ron Brand plus an infield out produced two runs in the second inning, propelling Houston to its third straight victory.

Connie Mack Finals Thurs.

FARMINGTON, N. M. (AP)— Through luck of the draw, Portland, Ore., has a spot in the finals of the Connie Mack baseball world series while Flint, Mich., and Long Beach, Calif., have to battle each other to stay in the meet.

Each of the three teams ended Tuesday's play with one loss as host Farmington dropped out with a 5-2 loss to Portland.

The draw gave Portland a bye into the finals and a day of rest today while Flint and Long Okach play tonight.

The championship game will be Thursday.

Johnson In Army Green

FT. SILL, Okla. (AP) — Charley Johnson, who a season ago was piloting the St. Louis Cardinals at quarterback, was an Army man toda as he began two years' active duty as a first lieutenant.

Johnson arrived at this artillery-missile center early Tuesday afternoon to begin a nine-week field artillery officer basic course.

Johnson will then go to the Langley Research Center, Hampton, Va., where he'll work with the Army element with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The 28-year-old Cards' star is an Army reserve officer called to active duty.

Johnson was injured last season after guiding the Cardinals to a 6-1 won-lost record. They finished 8-5-1 in the National Football League.

Johnson said he would know within a few days if he would be able to play intraservice football, but he said chances were good that he would.

WELCOMES TEACHERS

To the New Teachers in the Southeast Missouri area and to Teachers Who Return Again This Year. We wish You a Successful Year.

IF WE HAD NO TEACHERS

IF WE HAD NO TEACHERS... Our children would not learn to read or write. . .they would not benefit from history. . .the experience of mankind through centuries.

IF WE HAD NO TEACHERS... Our children could not enjoy great literature of the world's writers . . . the music of the composers . . .the arts in their many forms.

IF WE HAD NO TEACHERS... Our children would live in a world of ignorance and misunderstanding. The people of the world would exist in intellectual darkness. . .a darkness shrouding the present. . . preventing a bigger tomorrow.

IF WE HAD NO TEACHERS... Our children would not enjoy the thousands of scientific and medical discoveries that have benefited civilization.

FOR ALL THAT MAN HAS ACCOMPLISHED. . . . . In the years since the beginning of time. . .he has accomplished through the basic knowledge provided him by the teachers and parents of the past and future.

Coffee Corner
by Cherie

I recently attended a large social function where the gentlemen were out en masse, and I was informed by a goodly number of these manly forms that what my column really lacked to make it first rate was sex! After trying to laugh this suggestion off only to have it hurled challengingly at me again and again, I got my Irish up and told the old duffers I'd just devote the column this week to that subject. So you agiatators--if this column today is short, nearsighted, and rather pitiful, it's because you picked the material--not I!! Sex--pause, and I won't say a pregnant pause as it would be just too obvious --you know I'd really be much safer writing about the extinction of the Maya Indian in South America, and probably much more informative, too, at least, I read a book on the Indians that I could understand. Don't you just love all these pre-marriage manuals they put out on this delicate subject? I tried reading one once, and not being anything but a very stupid layman with no knowledge of medical terminology, I was never very sure when they started spouting those lengthy terms such as bronchus, phalanges, ureters, and etc., which end was even under discussion; much less how to go about getting acquainted. Speaking of agiatators, Charles just wanted to know what I was writing about this week and when I told him he (after a period of time taken up with convulsive laughter), told me with my limited knowledge to forget it as I wouldn't even be able to complete the first paragraph, much less fill a whole column. Now how is that for faith and encouragement from your helpmate? That Charles, he wants a good cook, neat housekeeper, marvelous laundress, and Gipsy Rose Lee all wrapped up in one package, and if the silly goose had that it would kill him in a week just trying to keep all the other envious husbands away from his door.

He'd better learn how to be content with a fairly decent cook, a good picker upper around the house, to keep his clothes clean but not so hot on the ironing, and at least I had Lee for a maiden name, (the Gypsy Rose strain must have petered out before my time). Well, back to sex, which is after all what this column is supposed to be about. That is the one thing about these movies and best-sellers that is such a scream to me. I mean I'm plenty gullible and lots of things are believable to me, like men on Mars in flying saucers, and dogs that talk, little things like that, but this constant parade of bedroom scenes amid suburbia that they show in the flicks and novels is the most unbelievable thing I've ever heard of. Now I appeal to you as a modern housewife, just when are you going to sandwich in a tryst with the plumber, the grocer or the milkman, (much less the neighbor next door), all in the same day and with all the work to be done that there is. In the first place, to get the plumber to your house is an accomplishment that totally drains you of any extra energy you might have, and you can bet your bottom boots when he finally does arrive he is pushed straight to either the stopped up garbage disposal or the stopped up commode, (depending on which room the kids have been playing in). Then when he's finished fixing that and hands over the bill, why, with what plumbers charge nowadays, any gal would be a fool to tip him anything extra. Second, the grocer always manages to arrive with your frozen T. V. dinners just 15 minutes before time to eat, and since they take a half hour to thaw and cook, who has time for him? Third, the milkman comes at six in the morning and husbands are usually still sleeping at your side, and if not who in heaven's name is amorous at six in the morning before their teeth are brushed? My neighbors only visit with their wives along--so there you are. However, the real stumbling block to me is the housewife herself, after sewing, sweeping, disting, washing and ironing all day whos got any energy left for any extra curricular activities, and what do you do with the kids, lock them in the clothes hamper?

Well readers, I've at least accomplished two things with today's column. I'll bet this will be the last time you'll insist on me writing on a certain subject, and best of all I showed old Charles I could get past the first paragraph!

FRUITS AND ROOTS

Many of us would love to have sin taken away. Who loves to have a hasty temper? Who loves to have a proud disposition? Who loves to have a worldly heart? No one. You ask Christ to take it away, and He does not do it? It is because you want Him to take away the ugly fruits while the poisonous roots remain in you. You do not ask that henceforth you might give up self entirely to the power of His Spirit.

Do you suppose that a painter would want to work out a beautiful picture on a canvas which does not belong to him? No. Yet people want Jesus Christ to take away this temper or that other sin while as yet they have not yielded themselves utterly to His command.

Beyond the fence, where winter-purple grapes
Forlornly cluster on an ermine veine,
Wind-flurried snow whirls swiftly, selltes, shapes
Long rows of drifts in shadowy design.
On ridge and hillside, bushes crouch, white-furred.
Bare branches crackle, and sere brown leaves flow
Only by fox feet moccasined with snow.

The wildest boat ride in America flushed thrill seekers of the 1870's down an unusual Nevada watercourse. It was all wood and a yard wide--and 15 miles long. The V flume, so named for its cross-sectional form, had been invented to float Sierra timber from forest to mines. Its sides were two-foot-broad planks, joined edgewise at a right angle, and it was supported on trestlework five to 70 feet high over hill and dale in a winding route, descending always at least one foot in 40 and in places as steeply as one in two. Water released from a mountain lake sluiced heavy timbers down the flume in a rumbling rush. Inevitably somebody tried riding the surge. A one-trip "boat" -- a plain V-bottomed trough fitting inside the flume--was knocked together. The ride proved to be a terror...and for hardy and privileged souls thenceforth, a test of courage. In 1877 a visiting New York dignitary recorded his experience. He rode with two Nevada silver magnates who enjoyed quarter ownerships in a $100-million mine. Crouched in a 30-inch-wide floating trough, he was breathlessly flung around curves, catapulted across ravines, hurled down steep slopes and generally wrenched and drenched. Each multi-millionaire vowed he wouldn't make the voyage again for his entire mine. The New Yorker noted that the 15-mile trip took only 35 minutes. As a free-drifting boat speed record, the 25 mph.

Report From Washington

Paul C. Jones

After reducing overall economic and military aid to other countries from a requested $3.4 billion to $2.6 billion, the Senate approved the Foreign Assistance Act of 1967.

This reduction came on the recommendation of the Foreign Relations Committee, of which I am a member. In its report on the bill, the Committee stated:

"Belt tightening because of the war (in Vietnam) must not be restricted to domestic programs but should include our foreign aid programs as well. American citizens should not be called upon to accept reductions in programs which affect their daily lives, see their taxes increased and war costs spiral, while the foreign aid program escapes unaffected and undiminished."

Under an amendment which I sponsored, economic assistance would be denied to any country diverting its resources to military expenditures to such an extent that it interferes with economic development or increases the danger of a regional arms race.

The Senate also sustained the Committee in eliminating the $384 million revolving fund in the Department of Defense that has been utilized to finance the sale of arms to various undeveloped countries: I supported the reduction of authorized funds for the program, but voted against passage of the bill in the belief that for many reasons, including fiscal and monetary ones, it would be well to suspend these programs because of the many requirements of the Treasury, not only because of the unfortunate war in Vietnam, but also because of the many badly needed domestic programs.

RECREATION FEES EXPLAINED

In a three-page letter, the Army Corps of Engineers has given us its reasons for charging fees to owners of private docks and other facilities on recreation areas under their jurisdiction. The example used is Table Rock Reservoir, but the policy is nationwide.

The House Public Works Committee plans hearings on bills that would prohibit these fees as well as entrance fees at Federal recreation areas. The questions raised have also been presented to the Senate Public Works Committee.

Among other factors, the Corps explained its belief that an inequity would exist in permitting land owners adjacent to these recreation areas the right to build private docks without charge at the same time non-residents have to pay for similar privileges through commercial concessions and organized, private boat clubs which in turn are required to pay fees based on use and privileges granted.

Copies of this policy letter are available from my office upon request.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS

The Senate Finance Committee begins hearings this week on the Social Security Amendments of 1967. The House has approved a bill which would increase by 12.5 percent the Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance benefits for persons already on the rolls and raise the minimum monthly payment from $44 to $50.

Other provisions of the House-passed measure include:

Changes in the Health Insurance program would extend the hospital care period from 90 to 120 days and provide an alternative plan of payment. Also, Social Security recipients would be allowed to earn up to $1680 a year without loss of payments. The present law allows earnings up to $1500.

Reforms also would be made in the Medical Assistance program, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Child Welfare and Health programs.

The cost of the increased benefits would be met by increases in the Social Security payroll tax as well as raising the amount of earnings subject to the tax from $6600 to $7600.

Got a problem kitchen -- poorly planned -- space going to waste? If you do, the answer is remodeling, says the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau.

Kitchens have come a long way since the turn of the century. Long gone is the plain, lifeless room with the wood-enclosed sink, hand pump or single faucet and coal-burning range. Modern kitchens, by contrast, have lost the bare look, and gained many work-saving advancements.

According to the Bureau, a new kitchen should be planned in terms of three work centers -- (1) the sink area for meal preparation and cleanup; (2) the range area for cooking and serving; (3) the refrigerator area for storage and mixing.

There are four general floor plans used for kitchens today -- L-shaped, U-shaped, one-wall and corridor. Since the homemaker spends most of her kitchen time at the sink, the selection of that fixture should be given careful consideration. A double or new triple-bowl sink with drainboards provides the ultimate in convenience.

Sinks come in the same lustrous shades as other plumbing fixtures --pink, blue, green, gray, yellow, suntan and ivory. They are also available ic the increasingly popular stainless steel. With the wide choice the homeowner has today, it is easy to plan an attractive, color-coordinated kitchen, with the sink as the starting point.

Among the popular features of modern sinks are the single control faucet, swivel spout, strainer draines, hose sprays and built-in soap dispensers. The finish of sink fittings is chrome, assuring a lifetime of mirror-bright sparkle.

In addition to the new sink, you will want to consider some of the other time and work-savers available for the kitchen today. Two of the best items ever developed for the housewife are the automatic dishwasher and food waste disposer. Together, they save hours of unpleasant work every day and improve sanitation, as well.

The man in the seat next to me on a Boston-New York flight had that unmistakably sound and salubrious look of a proper Bostonian. We introduced ourselves. He was a distinguished Harvard graduate, in middle life, engaged in running a large investment trust, bearing one of the best Boston names, active in the life of Harvard. He was reading a Boston Herald. I had a New York Times, which, having read, I offered to him. He hesitated. "Thank you," he said, "but I think I'll stick to the Herald. If I read the Times, I get sort of mixed up."

As the curtains part and out she whirls.

Where is that tomboy girl I knew,

Well, back to sex, which is after all what this column is supposed to be about. That is the one thing about these movies and best-sellers that is such a scream to me. I mean I'm plenty gullible and lots of things are believable to me, like men on Mars in flying saucers, and dogs that talk, little things like that, but this constant parade of bedroom scenes amid suburbia that they show in the flicks and novels is the most unbelievable thing I've ever heard of. Now I appeal to you as a modern housewife, just when are you going to sandwich in a tryst with the plumber, the grocer or the milkman, (much less the neighbor next door), all in the same day and with all the work to be done that there is. In the first place, to get the plumber to your house is an accomplishment that totally drains you of any extra energy you might have, and you can bet your bottom boots when he finally does arrive he is pushed straight to either the stopped up garbage disposal or the stopped up commode, (depending on which room the kids have been playing in). Then when he's finished fixing that and hands over the bill, why, with what plumbers charge nowadays, any gal would be a fool to tip him anything extra. Second, the grocer always manages to arrive with your frozen T. V. dinners just 15 minutes before time to eat, and since they take a half hour to thaw and cook, who has time for him? Third, the milkman comes at six in the morning and husbands are usually still sleeping at your side, and if not who in heaven's name is amorous at six in the morning before their teeth are brushed? My neighbors only visit with their wives along--so there you are. However, the real stumbling block to me is the housewife herself, after sewing, sweeping, disting, washing and ironing all day whos got any energy left for any extra curricular activities, and what do you do with the kids, lock them in the clothes hamper?

Well readers, I've at least accomplished two things with today's column. I'll bet this will be the last time you'll insist on me writing on a certain subject, and best of all I showed old Charles I could get past the first paragraph!

FRUITS AND ROOTS

Many of us would love to have sin taken away. Who loves to have a hasty temper? Who loves to have a proud disposition? Who loves to have a worldly heart? No one. You ask Christ to take it away, and He does not do it? It is because you want Him to take away the ugly fruits while the poisonous roots remain in you. You do not ask that henceforth you might give up self entirely to the power of His Spirit.

Do you suppose that a painter would want to work out a beautiful picture on a canvas which does not belong to him? No. Yet people want Jesus Christ to take away this temper or that other sin while as yet they have not yielded themselves utterly to His command.

Beyond the fence, where winter-purple grapes
Forlornly cluster on an ermine veine,
Wind-flurried snow whirls swiftly, selltes, shapes
Long rows of drifts in shadowy design.
On ridge and hillside, bushes crouch, white-furred.
Bare branches crackle, and sere brown leaves flow
Only by fox feet moccasined with snow.

The wildest boat ride in America flushed thrill seekers of the 1870's down an unusual Nevada watercourse. It was all wood and a yard wide--and 15 miles long. The V flume, so named for its cross-sectional form, had been invented to float Sierra timber from forest to mines. Its sides were two-foot-broad planks, joined edgewise at a right angle, and it was supported on trestlework five to 70 feet high over hill and dale in a winding route, descending always at least one foot in 40 and in places as steeply as one in two. Water released from a mountain lake sluiced heavy timbers down the flume in a rumbling rush. Inevitably somebody tried riding the surge. A one-trip "boat" -- a plain V-bottomed trough fitting inside the flume--was knocked together. The ride proved to be a terror...and for hardy and privileged souls thenceforth, a test of courage. In 1877 a visiting New York dignitary recorded his experience. He rode with two Nevada silver magnates who enjoyed quarter ownerships in a $100-million mine. Crouched in a 30-inch-wide floating trough, he was breathlessly flung around curves, catapulted across ravines, hurled down steep slopes and generally wrenched and drenched. Each multi-millionaire vowed he wouldn't make the voyage again for his entire mine. The New Yorker noted that the 15-mile trip took only 35 minutes. As a free-drifting boat speed record, the 25 mph.

Report From Washington

Paul C. Jones

After reducing overall economic and military aid to other countries from a requested $3.4 billion to $2.6 billion, the Senate approved the Foreign Assistance Act of 1967.

This reduction came on the recommendation of the Foreign Relations Committee, of which I am a member. In its report on the bill, the Committee stated:

"Belt tightening because of the war (in Vietnam) must not be restricted to domestic programs but should include our foreign aid programs as well. American citizens should not be called upon to accept reductions in programs which affect their daily lives, see their taxes increased and war costs spiral, while the foreign aid program escapes unaffected and undiminished."

Under an amendment which I sponsored, economic assistance would be denied to any country diverting its resources to military expenditures to such an extent that it interferes with economic development or increases the danger of a regional arms race.

The Senate also sustained the Committee in eliminating the $384 million revolving fund in the Department of Defense that has been utilized to finance the sale of arms to various underveloped countries: I supported the reduction of authorized funds for the program, but voted against passage of the bill in the belief that for many reasons, including fiscal and monetary ones, it would be well to suspend these programs because of the many requirements of the Treasury, not only because of the unfortunate war in Vietnam, but also because of the many badly needed domestic programs.

RECREATION FEES EXPLAINED

In a three-page letter, the Army Corps of Engineers has given us its reasons for charging fees to owners of private docks and other facilities on recreation areas under their jurisdiction. The example used is Table Rock Reservoir, but the policy is nationwide.

The House Public Works Committee plans hearings on bills that would prohibit these fees as well as entrance fees at Federal recreation areas. The questions raised have also been presented to the Senate Public Works Committee.

Among other factors, the Corps explained its belief that an inequity would exist in permitting land owners adjacent to these recreation areas the right to build private docks without charge at the same time nonresidents have to pay for similar privileges through commercial concessions and organized, private boat clubs which in turn are required to pay fees based on use and privileges granted.

Copies of this policy letter are available from my office upon request.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS

The Senate Finance Committee begins hearings this week on the Social Security Amendments of 1967. The House has approved a bill which would increase by 12.5 percent the Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance benefits for persons already on the rolls and raise the minimum monthly payment from $44 to $50.

Other provisions of the House-passed measure include:

Changes in the Health Insurance program would extend the hospital care period from 90 to 120 days and provide an alternative plan of payment. Also, Social Security recipients would be allowed to earn up to $1680 a year without loss of payments. The present law allows earnings up to $1500.

Reforms also would be made in the Medical Assistance program, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Child Welfare and Health programs.

The cost of the increased benefits would be met by increases in the Social Security payroll tax as well as raising the amount of earnings subject to the tax from $6600 to $7600.

Got a problem kitchen -- poorly planned -- space going to waste? If you do, the answer is remodeling, says the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau.

Kitchens have come a long way since the turn of the century. Long gone is the plain, lifeless room with the wood-enclosed sink, hand pump or single faucet and coal-burning range. Modern kitchens, by contrast, have lost the bare look, and gained many work-saving advancements.

According to the Bureau, a new kitchen should be planned in terms of three work centers -- (1) the sink area for meal preparation and cleanup; (2) the range area for cooking and serving; (3) the refrigerator area for storage and mixing.

There are four general floor plans used for kitchens today -- L-shaped, U-shaped, one-wall and corridor. Since the homemaker spends most of her kitchen time at the sink, the selection of that fixture should be given careful consideration. A double or new triple-bowl sink with drainboards provides the ultimate in convenience.

Sinks come in the same lustrous shades as other plumbing fixtures --pink, blue, green, gray, yellow, suntan and ivory. They are also available ic the increasingly popular stainless steel. With the wide choice the homeowner has today, it is easy to plan an attractive, color-coordinated kitchen, with the sink as the starting point.

Among the popular features of modern sinks are the single control faucet, swivel spout, strainer draines, hose sprays and built-in soap dispensers. The finish of sink fittings is chrome, assuring a lifetime of mirror-bright sparkle.

In addition to the new sink, you will want to consider some of the other time and work-savers available for the kitchen today. Two of the best items ever developed for the housewife are the automatic dishwasher and food waste disposer. Together, they save hours of unpleasant work every day and improve sanitation, as well.

The man in the seat next to me on a Boston-New York flight had that unmistakably sound and salubrious look of a proper Bostonian. We introduced ourselves. He was a distinguished Harvard graduate, in middle life, engaged in running a large investment trust, bearing one of the best Boston names, active in the life of Harvard. He was reading a Boston Herald. I had a New York Times, which, having read, I offered to him. He hesitated. "Thank you," he said, "but I think I'll stick to the Herald. If I read the Times, I get sort of mixed up."

Can that dainty, graceful girl
Be really mine? I muse
As the curtains part and out she whirls.
In the footlights' rainbow hues.
Where is that tomboy girl I knew,
(With surely two left feet?)
This one taps lightly right on cue
She doesn't miss a beat.
The first recital has me guessing,
(Such a very important event,)
But the thought is there and keeps persisting--
I wonder where my Audrey went!

Couey Joins Cape College

COLUMBIA -- The modern university observed Clark Kerr, the former president of the University of California's nine-campus system, is a multiversity. Its faculties are engaged in so many different kinds of tasks that it has become difficult to identify a single common function performed by all faculty members.

That large state universities are considerably more than centers of classroom teaching is nothing new. For the Morrill Act of 1862, which created the land-grant universities, envisioned wide-ranging activities for government-supported universities. The land grant schools, from their inception, were to engage in teaching, research, and public service.

Nowhere was this more evident than in the agricultural extension programs of the universities. Funded heavily by the federal government, the land-grant university's extension programs brought all three functions directly to the people through centers in every county. But the public, corporate industry, labor, and government soon began to rely on the universities for teaching, research, and consultation in areas besides agriculture. Thus, the universities grew into complicated organizations populated by students, teachers, researchers, consultants, and administrators.

In many respects, the University of Missouri has experienced a similar growth. Its extra-teaching functions have long ago moved from a concentration on agriculture to virtually every field of human learning.

But how do the people of Missouri presently view the University? Is it a teaching center alone? Do they see it performing the many activities envisioned by the land-grant act? Is it a multiversity?

To shed light on these questions the Public Opinion Survey Unit of the University of Missouri asked its statewide sample of nearly 1,000 people in the summer of 1966: "Besides teaching its students, do you think the University of Missouri does anything for the rest of the people in the state of Missouri? What do you have in mind?" A few years ago, the Survey Research Center of the University of Michigan asked a similar question of Michigan residents; the Michigan question, of course, referred both to Michigan State (the land-grant school) and the University of Michigan. The results provide interesting comparisons.

In Missouri, fully 41 per cent of the respondents stated that they didn't know of anything the University of Missouri did besides teaching, or else said that the University did nothing in addition to teaching students. Another 10 per cent believed the University did other things but couldn't say what. The remaining 49 per cent were able to name one or more specific functions besides teaching that the University performs.

In Michigan, by contrast, only 28 per cent of the respondents either though the universities did only teaching or else could not name additional functions. The great majority, 72 per cent, were able to list some of the other functions. Thus, even though the universities in the two states are involved in virtually the same extra-teaching programs, Michigan residents were much more likely than Missouri residents to view their universities as multiversities.

There are also very pronounced differences in the kinds of functions beyond teaching listed by the Missouri and Michigan respondents. The table below presents those respondents mentioning a specific function performed by the respective state universities.

The most striking difference relates to agriculture. Insofar as Missourians feel that the University engages in activities beyond teaching, nearly half of them are likely to mention agricultural research, experimentation, and consultation. As one farmer put it, "When my hogs got that disease, I just called the University extension and they told me what to do." Or, as a suburban housewife observed, "I couldn't grow flowers in this soil so I wrote the University and found out how to fertilize it and improve it." Only 15 per cent of the Michigan respondents mentioned agriculturally-related services. Roughly equal numbers cited their universities' hospital facilities and medical research activities.

On the other hand, far more Michigan residents mentioned such functions as adult education through the extension, basic and applied research in fields besides medicine or agriculture, training of community leaders, cultural activities, educational reports, and work in developing nations.

Thus, to a majority of Missourians the University of Missouri is primarily and almost exclusively a teaching center. When it does become involved in research or public service, they feel it is still usually in fields related to agriculture. The public image has not yet changed to accord with actual practice, or perhaps the public feels that the University of Missouri has not developed non-agricultural programs to the extent that Michigan universities have.

% of those naming one or more additional functions

| Additional Functions | Missouri | Michigan |
|---|---|---|
| Agricultural experimentation, research and consultation services | 47% | 15% |
| Health and hospital: medical care, research, hospital services | 17 | 18 |
| Extension course offerings (non-agricultural) | 15 | 23 |
| Research (other non-agricultural, non-medical fields) | 14 | 23 |
| Raising general standard of living in state; economic improvement | 12 | 7 |
| Entertainment and cultural activities: plays, athletics, music, etc. | 9 | 18 |
| Circulation of educational materials (non-agricultural) | 6 | 16 |
| Improving quality of community leaders, etc. through institutes, short courses | 2 | 15 |
| Miscellaneous functions | 14 | 28 |

Rains Hampers Hobo Convention

BRITT, Iowa (AP) — Only nine hoboes braved the rain Tuesday to attend the 67th annual Hobo Convention.

But it took five votes before the Hardrock Kid could be elected king of the hoboes and receive his coveted crown—a coffee can.

The Kid, whose real name is John Mislen, a New Jersey native, regained the crown he lost last year to the Pennsylvania Kid, Richard Wilson.

Draft Rules For Students In College

BENTON -- Selective Service board 115 calls attention of college students to regulations:

An undergraduate student must file with his local board a written request for student deferment. Each local board has available a form which may be used for this request.

An undergraduate student must provide evidence that he has earned the required number of units, or hours, to be considered a full-time satisfactory student. For example, a student who is taking a four-year course which requires 120 hours to earn a degree should have earned 30 academic hours for each year he has attended school. Standing in class is no longer considered in determining whether a registrant is eligible to be considered for student deferment. He must have earned the necessary number of academic hours.

Under the new military selective service act, the student's academic year shall include the 12-month period following the beginning of his course of study.

Also under the new regulation, if a young man has not been reached for induction on account of his age before he enters college, consideration will be given to the granting of a II-S deferment even if there was a period when he was not in school. Once he enrolls in an undergraduate study program he must file a request for a student deferment, a full-time satisfactory student and not have reached his 24th birthday.

Graduate students also must request a student deferment. The graduate student should contact his local board for further information.

It is permissible and customary for the local board to consider a registrant for class II-S deferment while he attends a trade or technical school. He must request the student deferment and meet the requirement of being a full-time, satisfactory student.

COLUMBIA -- The modern university observed Clark Kerr, the former president of the University of California's nine-campus system, is a multiversity. Its faculties are engaged in so many different kinds of tasks that it has become difficult to identify a single common function performed by all faculty members.

That large state universities are considerably more than centers of classroom teaching is nothing new. For the Morrill Act of 1862, which created the land-grant universities, envisioned wide-ranging activities for government-supported universities. The land grant schools, from their inception, were to engage in teaching, research, and public service.

Nowhere was this more evident than in the agricultural extension programs of the universities. Funded heavily by the federal government, the land-grant university's extension programs brought all three functions directly to the people through centers in every county. But the public, corporate industry, labor, and government soon began to rely on the universities for teaching, research, and consultation in areas besides agriculture. Thus, the universities grew into complicated organizations populated by students, teachers, researchers, consultants, and administrators.

In many respects, the University of Missouri has experienced a similar growth. Its extra-teaching functions have long ago moved from a concentration on agriculture to virtually every field of human learning.

But how do the people of Missouri presently view the University? Is it a teaching center alone? Do they see it performing the many activities envisioned by the land-grant act? Is it a multiversity?

To shed light on these questions the Public Opinion Survey Unit of the University of Missouri asked its statewide sample of nearly 1,000 people in the summer of 1966: "Besides teaching its students, do you think the University of Missouri does anything for the rest of the people in the state of Missouri? What do you have in mind?" A few years ago, the Survey Research Center of the University of Michigan asked a similar question of Michigan residents; the Michigan question, of course, referred both to Michigan State (the land-grant school) and the University of Michigan. The results provide interesting comparisons.

In Missouri, fully 41 per cent of the respondents stated that they didn't know of anything the University of Missouri did besides teaching, or else said that the University did nothing in addition to teaching students. Another 10 per cent believed the University did other things but couldn't say what. The remaining 49 per cent were able to name one or more specific functions besides teaching that the University performs.

In Michigan, by contrast, only 28 per cent of the respondents either though the universities did only teaching or else could not name additional functions. The great majority, 72 per cent, were able to list some of the other functions. Thus, even though the universities in the two states are involved in virtually the same extra-teaching programs, Michigan residents were much more likely than Missouri residents to view their universities as multi-versities.

There are also very pronounced differences in the kinds of functions beyond teaching listed by the Missouri and Michigan respondents. The table below presents those respondents mentioning a specific function performed by the respective state universities.

The most striking difference relates to agriculture. Insofar as Missourians feel that the University engages in activities beyond teaching, nearly half of them are likely to mention agricultural research, experimentation, and consultation. As one farmer put it, "When my hogs got that disease, I just called the University extension and they told me what to do." Or, as a suburban housewife observed, "I couldn't grow flowers in this soil so I wrote the University and found out how to fertilize it and improve it." Only 15 per cent of the Michigan respondents mentioned agriculturally-related services. Roughly equal numbers cited their universities' hospital facilities and medical research activities.

On the other hand, far more Michigan residents mentioned such functions as adult education through the extension, basic and applied research in fields besides medicine or agriculture, training of community leaders, cultural activities, educational reports, and work in developing nations.

Thus, to a majority of Missourians the University of Missouri is primarily and almost exclusively a teaching center. When it does become involved in research or public service, they feel it is still usually in fields related to agriculture. The public image has not yet changed to accord with actual practice, or perhaps the public feels that the University of Missouri has not developed non-agricultural programs to the extent that Michigan universities have.

| Additional Functions | % of those naming one or more additional functions: Missouri | Michigan |
|---|---|---|
| Agricultural experimentation, research and consultation services | 47% | 15% |
| Health and hospital: medical care, research, hospital services | 17 | 18 |
| Extension course offerings (non-agricultural) | 15 | 23 |
| Research (other non-agricultural, non-medical fields) | 14 | 23 |
| Raising general standard of living in state; economic improvement | 12 | 7 |
| Entertainment and cultural activities: plays, athletics, music, etc. | 9 | 18 |
| Circulation of educational materials (non-agricultural) | 6 | 16 |
| Improving quality of community leaders, etc. through institutes, short courses | 2 | 15 |
| Miscellaneous functions | 14 | 28 |

Rains Hampers Hobo Convention

BRITT, Iowa (AP) — Only nine hoboes braved the rain Tuesday to attend the 67th annual Hobo Convention.

But it took five votes before the Hardrock Kid could be elected king of the hoboes and receive his coveted crown—a coffee can.

The Kid, whose real name is John Mislen, a New Jersey native, regained the crown he lost last year to the Pennsylvania Kid, Richard Wilson.

Draft Rules For Students In College

BENTON -- Selective Service board 115 calls attention of college students to regulations:

An undergraduate student must file with his local board a written request for student deferment. Each local board has available a form which may be used for this request.

An undergraduate student must provide evidence that he has earned the required number of units, or hours, to be considered a full-time satisfactory student. For example, a student who is taking a four-year course which requires 120 hours to earn a degree should have earned 30 academic hours for each year he has attended school. Standing in class is no longer considered in determining whether a registrant is eligible to be considered for student deferment. He must have earned the necessary number of academic hours.

Under the new military selective service act, the student's academic year shall include the 12-month period following the beginning of his course of study.

Also under the new regulation, if a young man has not been reached for induction on account of his age before he enters college, consideration will be given to the granting of a II-S deferment even if there was a period when he was not in school. Once he enrolls in an undergraduate study program he must file a request for a student deferment, a full-time satisfactory student and not have reached his 24th birthday.

Graduate students also must request a student deferment. The graduate student should contact his local board for further information.

It is permissible and customary for the local board to consider a registrant for class II-S deferment while he attends a trade or technical school. He must request the student deferment and meet the requirement of being a full-time, satisfactory student.

The Prayer From The Upper Room

I do not account my life of any value nor as precious to myself, if only I may accomplish my course and the ministry which I received from the Lord Jesus to testify to the gospel of the grace of God. (Acts 20:24, RSV)

PRAYER: Teach us, our Father, the joy of total giving of ourselves to Christ. Help us to share with Him completely our time, our money, our life, and our love. We pray in His name. Amen.

Friends, Relatives Most Frequent Murder Victims

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — U.S. Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark said Tuesday, "About 38 per cent of all murders involved members of the same family."

Another 40 per cent, according to the latest Justice Department statistics, involved "close friends."

The remaining 22 per cent, Clark said, can be charged to mentally unstable persons and others "for just plain meanness."

Student Leader Named

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Edward Schwartz, 24, of Scarsdale, N.Y., was elected president of the National Student Association on Tuesday.

He succeeds W. Eugene Groves. Schwartz, a 1965 graduate of Oberlin College, served as national affairs vice president for the NSA during the past year.

Tito's Attempt to Kidnap the Bishop

Deep into the night the five men studied their plan to kidnap the Patriarch of the Serbian Orthodox Church of Trieste.

All the elements of cloak and dagger fiction were bound up in this fantastic scheme. There was the blackmail angle to ensure that the kidnapping was successful. There was loot, too.

Belgrade was sure the plot would succeed. Hadn't it taken measures to make sure that nothing would go wrong? No one would ever know -- at least not for sure -- that the Yugoslav communists had pulled off a kidnapping to destroy a church hierarchy.

That was the thinking behind Marshal Tito's plot to destroy the Serbian Orthodox Church of Trieste -- a true story so shocking it sounds unreal. The conspiracy, revealed in a 1965 U.S. Government document entitled, The Church and State Under Communism, Volume III, revealed the bloody religious persecution taking place under communism.

The attempted kidnapping of Doctor Dragoljub Vurdelja, says Senator Thomas Dodd, was for some strange reason completely ignored by the American press despite its drama, international ramifications, and its thorough coverage by the Italian press last December.

The case is best viewed within the context of the current effort on the part of the Serbian Orthodox Church in Yugoslavia to extend its control over its counterparts in other countries. The Serbian Orthodox Church in Trieste is a prize of particular importance; it has one of the finest Serbian cathedrals in the world, and Trieste is politically significant as an exit point for refugees from Yugoslavia.

Before Dr. Vurdelja became head of this church community in 1952, it was under the control of Marshal Tito. Dr. Vurdelja soon changed that -- separating it from connection with the Patriarchate in Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

To Tito, this church community was a political prize and a symbol of the score he had to even with Dr. Vurdelja. There was only one thing to do: he had to abduct Dr. Vuldelja, spirit him across an unpatrolled section of the border and thus remove the most potent communist opposition within the Serbian Orthodox Community. With Dr. Vurdelja out of the way, communist elements within the church of Trieste would be able to assert themselves. It was typical racketeer rationale: the pro-Tito forces would control the rather considerable wealth of the church -- estimated to be more than 10 billion lire.

The chief plotter in the kidnap attempt was Livio Paolini, a rather unfortunate Italian national. His troubles began when he motored to Fiume, Yugoslavia. Marked as the communist's patsy, he was framed on a false charge of smuggling drugs into Yugoslavia by car. Paolini protested briefly that the drugs had been planted in the automobile without his knowleged. He was forced into the plan when the Yugoslav communists threatened blackmail: he could go to prison or agree to organize the kidnapping of Dr. Vurdelja.

Paolini returned Trieste and enlisted four accomplices. They set up careful surveillance of Dr. Vurdelja's daily movements throughout the city, and armed themselves with narcotics, nightsticks, technical equipment and two automobiles. Before the plan was executed, one of the four accomplices warned Dr. Vurdelja, and all five men were arrested.

During the trial, Dr. Vurdelja testified that the communists wanted to eliminate him and thereby confiscate the property of the church. He also testified that the kidnap effort wasn't Tito's first attempt to do him in: there was that time in 1946 when Tito tried something similar, plus an assassination attempt later. In each case, Dr. Vurdelja said, the plots had the cumbersome mark of Yugoslave brutality about them and had involved highly placed officials of the Yugoslav government.

When Paolini was asked why he didn't try to extricate himself from it all, he explained that Yugoslav agents said they would kill him, boasting they could eliminate a person in Trieste with no trouble at all because they had their own men at police headquarters.

On December 22, 1964, the Criminal Tribunal of Trieste found the five men guilty and sentenced them to prison terms ranging from two to six years. The men directly responsible were thus put away, but the masterminds of the plot--the men in Belgrade, from Tito on down--could not be tried and sentenced for this or other crimes against the Church.

Dr. Vuldelja had been fortunate, but other clergymen were not. According to the U.S. Senate report, 90 per cent of the Serbian Orthodox clergy has suffered from persecution by the Yugoslav regime. The Law Division of the Library of Congress, which prepared this revealing report, said:

"Long is the list of priests who have been shaved, spat upon, humiliated, and offended, who have been confined in penitentiaries, fortresses, and concentration camps."

Concerning persecution of the Catholic Church alone, of a total of 2,700 Croat priests, 400 have been killed, 200 have fled abroad, and several hundred have been jailed since 1946. Despite calculated slaughter and confinement of Godly men and destruction of churches, Tito is hailed by duped Americans as the kind of communist with which the free world can deal; that he is the "deviationist" who defies Moscow and is thus more acceptable to the West. This foolish idea crops up when a political solution to a world hot spot is elusive, and the appeasers suggest the formulation of a "Titoist" type regime as the solution. The folly of such is no better illustrated than by Tito's war against God.

When Tito's band of brigands proclaimed Yugoslavia a "republic" on November 29, 1945, the carnage against the church was already under way. In the year 1944 - 1945, Yugoslav communists executed 98 priests without a trial. Others experienced horrible trials by ordeal.

Jospi Cvijovic, leader of the Serbian Orthodox Church from 1944 to 1946, vehemently opposed the communist regime. Despite the threat of death and the burning of the patriarchate, he refused to recognize the communists. While interned in a monastery, his health deteriorated. He died a political prisoner in Belgrade on July 3, 1957. His death proved that Tito cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be thought of as more acceptable than the communists in Moscow or Peking.

There was also tragedy for Bishop Irinej Ciric. In 1945, under the guise of the so-called "people's authority," a night attack was made on his residence in Novi Sad. The Bishop was hit on the chest with a large stone, but saved himself by hiding in a shed. In 1946, he was stoned by a communist mob during a procession in the town of Odjaci. He fell to the ground, was beaten and spat upon, his beard was pulled (the classic act of humiliating a man of God), and his clothes were torn. Because of his injuries, he was bedridden for nine years. Bishop Ciric died April 5, 1955.

Other men of God in Yugoslavia are forced into a living death. Bishop Varnava A. Mastic, born in Gary, Indiana, went to Serbia at the age of nine. After his elevation to Bishop, he was sentenced to 11 years at hard labor on March 1, 1948 by the District Court of Sarajevo. The charges against him:

"Treason, weakening the economic and military power of the State, aiding terrorist bands, carrying on enemy propaganda, and espionage for the benefit of the Anglo - Americans." He served part of his sentence at Zenica penitentiary in solitary confinement. Though he was slowly tortured by starvation and thirst, his spirit did not break. His defiance was a source of moral strength to other inmates of Zenica penitentiary and, as a result, he was transferred to Sremska Mitrovica. An attempt was made to murder him, but succeeded only in breaking his feet and one arm. The last report on Bishop Nastic was that he is still confined at Sremska Mitrovica penitentiary, but only the Yugoslav communists know if he is still alive.

There are numerous other examples of communist disregard for the life of clergymen in Yugoslavia. Roman Catholic victims include: Dr. Josip Carevic, murdered in 1945 and thrown into a well just as he was about to celebrate the Mass; Bishop Anton Vovk of Ljubljana was severely burned at the railway station at Novo Mesto when gasoline was poured on his person and ignited.

The German Lutherans have, practically speaking, disappeared from Yugoslavia. 20,000 Calvinists are missing; many were killed, others were expelled.

When torture and murder fail, the Yugoslav campaign against the Church picks up momentum by state law. The state has deprived the church of its properties, vested rights, independent press and autonomy.

The various churches are governed by Communist bureaucracy known as commissions for religious affairs and headed by Communist Party members who have been specifically trained to combat religion. The Yugoslav communist regime also established the government - sponsored priests' associations - misnamed the "people's clergy" -whose duty is to strengthen "the gallant national liberation struggle and in particular the people's authority."

The "priests' associations" are simply a means of supervising and pressuring the church for the benefit of the communist government. Members are known as "people's Priests" to distinguish them from those who are not members and who are therefore "against the people" -- in other words, against the communists.

The facts revealed by the U.S. Senate Report vividly illustrate the murderous Yugoslav communist attitude toward man's right to worship as he pleases. Indeed they show that communism under Tito is as anti-human and anti-God as communism under Lenin the Revolutionary, Stalin the master of Genocide, Mao, the Murderer of Tibetan Monks, Khrushchev "The Butcher of Budapest" and all who follow them in their attempts to subjugate the world.

The graves of clergymen in Yugoslavia are silent, but they tell the awful truth about Tito "the acceptable communist."

Little Timothy came in from Sunday School and his mother asked him what he had learned that morning.

He proceeded to tell her the Bible story about the people who were running away from the mean king and they didn't want to be captured. They came to some water and took out their walkie - talkies and asked a man across the river if it was safe to come across. He said yes and then they inflated their rubber rafts and floated everybody across and escaped.

His mother, slightly unbelieving, asked: "Is that really what your teacher told you about Moses and the people he was leading from bondage?"

Timmy said, "No. But if I told you what she really said I figured you'd never believe it."

The Sacrifice of Captain Quinn, Et Al

MINISTER DEFINES
BY THE REV. PETER KOEL KNOST

Recently I had occasion to visit a United States Naval Hospital in the Boston area. I was invited to make the visit for the express purpose of meeting a young Army captain who had been recuperating for several months from wounds received in Vietnam. The captain's name was John Quinn, and his home was originally Berlin, New Hampshire.

On the day of my visit, as it happened, Captain Quinn learned that he had been awarded the Bronze Star with two "V" devices for Valour, and an Oak Leaf Cluster for exceptionally meritorious service in leading troops under stress and inspiring South Vietnamese soldiers to make a courageous stand. He had truly qualified as an American hero.

But there was still another decoration that John Quinn was to receive -- a decoration, however, that underscored a personal tragedy: the Purple Heart. The price of this American's gallantry was his right leg!

As I stood beside his bed, wondering whether he felt the price he paid was worth it, Captain Quinn made it quite clear to me that he believed it was. He had made a great sacrifice for his country. It was a proud sacrifice. And his country was more secure because of it. He, like countless other Americans, had risked life and limb to preserve Freedom -- to preserve the American Dream.

What is the American Dream? You who fought and bled for America should know. You who have grown comfortably rich in America should know. You who enjoy opportunity unlimited in America should know. But do you know? Do you know what is happening to her now? Are you concerned with her future?

There are danger signs everywhere about us today. Unrest and discontent plague the masses. Crime and violence threaten the safety of our city streets. Riots and demonstrations have become commonplace. Our moral and spiritual standards -- our national moral and spiritual standards -- have been seriously weakened, much to the delight of the Communist conspiracy. We find our Supreme Court has declared it unconstitutional to teach our children in the public schools that this great Nation was founded "to the glory of God and the advancement of the ... faith." And we find much of our citizenry totally unconcerned and totally unaware of what is taking place.

Now these are the dangers threatening America today. They are grave dangers -- that would happily see the end of our national traditions. What is happening to America today? Is her spirit dead? Is she now afraid to fight for Freedom? Will she fail to oppose her enemies?

This much is certain: the dangers will continue until we fully regain our determination to fulfill the American Dream; until we fully understand that America is a Nation under God, singularly blessed, singularly free; great among all nations of the earth. And we will be convinced of this fact only by recognizing and accepting America's special Covenant with God.

Yes, contrary to what the enemies of religion are striving to obscure today, America was founded as a "Nation under God." With this ideal before them, the Founding Fathers bravely declared their independence.

Those who signed the Charter of Liberty were deeply concerned about the rights bestowed upon men by the Creator. They called them "unalienable rights." They were rights that belonged to every man, regardless of his station. They were rights that made men free. The signers of the Declaration of Indepedence of Thomas Jefferson, "the God liberty." They were willing to fight and to die for this ideal. That is why in the closing lines of their Document of Freedom, "with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine providence," they pledged to each other "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor." And their pledged improved to be a costly one. Many fought. Many died...

But these men knew full well the risks involved. Nothing would dissuade them from the holy mission that pertained to God-given rights. After all, Christ did not sit with the Caesars. And they were not about to sit with King George. Christ did not cast lots with the money - changers. And they were not about to sell their souls -- or their freedom -- for a handful of change.

Do you know what happened to the men who signed the Declaration of Independence? Do you know the suffering they endured? The night before the Declaration was adopted, John Adams of Massachusetts wrote his wife: "I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure it will cost us to maintain this Declaration." And cost it did! Five were captured and tortured to death by the British. Nine others fought and died from wounds or hardship. Twelve had their homes pillaged and burned. Two lost their sons in battle.

Most of these early patriots were young men. In fact, eighteen of them were under thirty. They were responsible, God-fearing family men who came from all walks of life -- lawyers and judges, merchants and farmers. But all had one ideal in common: Freedom under God. And all knew that by signing the Declaration they would be hanged if caught. Not one Escaped Abuse! All Fifty - six Signers Sacrificed Dearly!

And what are you sacrificing to keep America free? Captain John Quinn sacrificed a leg. Countless Americans have sacrificed their lives. Is it asking too much of you today to understand your American heritage and to endeavor to pass it intact to succeeding generations? Is it asking too much of you to read your Constitution, your Bill of Rights, your Declaration of Independence? They are, after all, truly your documents of Freedom. And they will live only as you, Mr. and Mrs. John Doe, seek to give them life.

We cannot combat the threats to our sovereignty if we do not understand what America was, is, and must continue to be: a free Nation under God! We cannot insure peace for America by abandoning our principles and compromising with communism. You can't compromise with evil. We cannot insure Freedom for America by imitating the socialist state. You can't have Freedom in servitude.

You see, peace and Freedom are not the products of politics. They are the blessings of righteousness. "Righteousness alone exalteth a nation." "That nation only is blessed whose God is the Lord."

Tito's Attempt to Kidnap the Bishop

Deep into the night the five men studied their plan to kidnap the Patriarch of the Serbian Orthodox Church of Trieste.

All the elements of cloak and dagger fiction were bound up in this fantastic scheme. There was the blackmail angle to ensure that the kidnapping was successful. There was loot, too.

Belgrade was sure the plot would succeed. Hadn't it taken measures to make sure that nothing would go wrong? No one would ever know -- at least not for sure --that the Yugoslav communists had pulled off a kidnapping to destroy a church hierarchy.

That was the thinking behind Marshal Tito's plot to destroy the Serbian Orthodox Church of Trieste -- a true story so shocking it sounds unreal. The conspiracy, revealed in a 1965 U.S. Government document entitled, The Church and State Under Communism, Volume III, revealed the bloody religious persecution taking place under communism.

The attempted kidnapping of Doctor Dragoljub Vurdelja, says Senator Thomas Dodd, was for some strange reason completely ignored by the American press despite its drama, international ramifications, and its thorough coverage by the Italian press last December.

The case is best viewed within the context of the current effort on the part of the Serbian Orthodox Church in Yugoslavia to extend its control over its counterparts in other countries. The Serbian Orthodox Church in Trieste is a prize of particular importance; it has one of the finest Serbian cathedrals in the world, and Trieste is politically significant as an exit point for refugees from Yugoslavia.

Before Dr. Vurdelja became head of this church community in 1952, it was under the control of Marshal Tito. Dr. Vurdelja soon changed that -- separating it from connection with the Patriarchate in Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

To Tito, this church community was a political prize and a symbol of the score he had to even with. Dr. Vurdelja. There was only one thing to do: he had to abduct Dr. Vuldelja, spirit him across an unpatrolled section of the border and thus remove the most potent communist opposition within the Serbian Orthodox Community. With Dr. Vurdelja out of the way, communist elements within the church of Trieste would be able to assert themselves. It was typical racketeer rationale: the pro-Tito forces would control the rather considerable wealth of the church -- estimated to be more than 10 billion lire.

The chief plotter in the kidnap attempt was Livio Paolini, a rather unfortunate Italian national. His troubles began when he motored to Fiume, Yugoslavia. Marked as the communist's patsy, he was framed on a false charge of smuggling drugs into Yugoslavia by car. Paolini protested briefly that the drugs had been planted in the automobile without his knowleged. He was forced into the plan when the Yugoslav communists threatened blackmail: he could go to prison or agree to organize the kidnapping of Dr. Vurdelja.

Paolini returned Trieste and enlisted four accomplices. They set up careful surveillance of Dr. Vurdelja's daily movements throughout the city, and armed themselves with narcotics, nightsticks, technical equipment and two automobiles. Before the plan was executed, one of the four accomplices warned Dr. Vurdelja, and all five men were arrested.

During the trial, Dr. Vurdelja testified that the communists wanted to eliminate him and thereby confiscate the property of the church. He also testified that the kidnap effort wasn't Tito's first attempt to do him in: there was that time in 1946 when Tito tried something similar, plus an assassination attempt later. In each case, Dr. Vurdelja said, the plots had the cumbersome mark of Yugoslave brutality about them and had involved highly placed officials of the Yugoslav government.

When Paolini was asked why he didn't try to extricate himself from it all, he explained that Yugoslav agents said they would kill him, boasting they could eliminate a person in Trieste with no trouble at all because they had their own men at police headquarters.

On December 22, 1964, the Criminal Tribunal of Trieste found the five men guilty and sentenced them to prison terms ranging from two to six years. The men directly responsible were thus put away, but the masterminds of the plot--the men in Belgrade, from Tito on down--could not be tried and sentenced for this or other crimes against the Church.

Dr. Vuldelja had been fortunate, but other clergymen were not. According to the U.S. Senate report, 90 per cent of the Serbian Orthodox clergy has suffered from persecution by the Yugoslav regime. The Law Division of the Library of Congress, which prepared this revealing report, said:

"Long is the list of priests who have been shaved, spat upon, humiliated, and offended, who have been confined in penitentiaries, fortresses, and concentration camps."

Concerning persecution of the Catholic Church alone, of a total of 2,700 Croat priests, 400 have been killed, 200 have fled abroad, and several hundred have been jailed since 1946. Despite calculated slaughter and confinement of Godly men and destruction of churches, Tito is hailed by duped Americans as the kind of communist with which the free world can deal; that he is the "deviationist" who defies Moscow and is thus more acceptable to the West. This foolish idea crops up when a political solution to a world hot spot is elusive, and the appeasers suggest the formulation of a "Titoist" type regime as the solution. The folly of such is no better illustrated than by Tito's war against God.

When Tito's band of brigands proclaimed Yugoslavia a "republic" on November 29, 1945, the carnage against the church was already under way. In the year 1944 - 1945, Yugoslav communists executed 98 priests without a trial. Others experienced horrible trials by ordeal.

Jospi Cvijovic, leader of the Serbian Orthodox Church from 1944 to 1946, vehemently opposed the communist regime. Despite the threat of death and the burning of the patriarchate, he refused to recognize the communists. While interned in a monastery, his health deteriorated. He died a political prisoner in Belgrade on July 3, 1957. His death proved that Tito cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be thought of as more acceptable than the communists in Moscow or Peking.

There was also tragedy for Bishop Irinej Ciric. In 1945, under the guise of the so-called "people's authority," a night attack was made on his residence in Novi Sad. The Bishop was hit on the chest with a large stone, but saved himself by hiding in a shed. In 1946, he was stoned by a communist mob during a procession in the town of Odjaci. He fell to the ground, was beaten and spat upon, his beard was pulled (the classic act of humiliating a man of God), and his clothes were torn. Because of his injuries, he was bedridden for nine years. Bishop Ciric died April 5, 1955.

Other men of God in Yugoslavia are forced into a living death. Bishop Varnava A. Mastic, born in Gary, Indiana, went to Serbia at the age of nine. After his elevation to Bishop, he was sentenced to 11 years at hard labor on March 1, 1948 by the District Court of Sarajevo. The charges against him:

"Treason, weakening the economic and military power of the State, aiding terrorist bands, carrying on enemy propaganda, and espionage for the benefit of the Anglo - Americans." He served part of his sentence at Zenica penitentiary in solitary confinement. Though he was slowly tortured by starvation and thirst, his spirit did not break. His defiance was a source of moral strength to other inmates of Zenica penitentiary and, as a result, he was transferred to Sremska Mitrovica. An attempt was made to murder him, but succeeded only in breaking his feet and one arm. The last report on Bishop Nastic was that he is still confined at Sremska Mitrovica penitentiary, but only the Yugoslav communists know if he is still alive.

There are numerous other examples of communist disregard for the life of clergymen in Yugoslavia. Roman Catholic victims include: Dr. Josip Carevic, murdered in 1945 and thrown into a well just as he was about to celebrate the Mass; Bishop Anton Vovk of Ljubljana was severely burned at the railway station at Novo Mesto when gasoline was poured on his person and ignited.

The German Lutherans have, practically speaking, disappeared from Yugoslavia. 20,000 Calvinists are missing; many were killed, others were expelled.

When torture and murder fail, the Yugoslav campaign against the Church picks up momentum by state law. The state has deprived the church of its properties, vested rights, independent press and autonomy.

The various churches are governed by Communist bureaucracy known as commissions for religious affairs and headed by Communist Party members who have been specifically trained to combat religion. The Yugoslav communist regime also established the government - sponsored priests' associations - misnamed the "people's clergy" -whose duty is to strengthen "the gallant national liberation struggle and in particular the people's authority."

The "priests' associations" are simply a means of supervising and pressuring the church for the benefit of the communist government. Members are known as "people's Priests" to distinguish them from those who are not members and who are therefore "against the people" -- in other words, against the communists.

The facts revealed by the U.S. Senate Report vividly illustrate the murderous Yugoslav communist attitude toward man's right to worship as he pleases. Indeed they show that communism under Tito is as anti-human and anti-God as communism under Lenin the Revolutionary, Stalin the master of Genocide, Mao, the Murderer of Tibetan Monks, Khrushchev "The Butcher of Budapest" and all who follow them in their attempts to subjugate the world.

The graves of clergymen in Yugoslavia are silent, but they tell the awful truth about Tito "the acceptable communist."

Little Timothy came in from Sunday School and his mother asked him what he had learned that morning.

He proceeded to tell her the Bible story about the people who were running away from the mean king and they didn't want to be captured. They came to some water and took out their walkie - talkies and asked a man across the river if it was safe to come across. He said yes and then they inflated their rubber rafts and floated everybody across and escaped.

His mother, slightly unbelieving, asked: "Is that really what your teacher told you about Moses and the people he was leading from bondage?"

Timmy said, "No. But if I told you what she really said I figured you'd never believe it."

The Sacrifice of Captain Quinn, Et Al

KNOST

Recently I had occasion to visit a United States Naval Hospital in the Boston area. I was invited to make the visit for the express purpose of meeting a young Army captain who had been recuperating for several months from wounds received in Vietnam. The captain's name was John Quinn, and his home was originally Berlin, New Hampshire.

On the day of my visit, as it happened, Captain Quinn learned that he had been awarded the Bronze Star with two "V" devices for Valour, and an Oak Leaf Cluster for exceptionally meritorious service in leading troops under stress and inspiring South Vietnamese soldiers to make a courageous stand. He had truly qualified as an American hero.

But there was still another decoration that John Quinn was to receive -- a decoration, however, that underscored a personal tragedy: the Purple Heart. The price of this American's gallantry was his right leg!

As I stood beside his bed, wondering whether he felt the price he paid was worth it, Captain Quinn made it quite clear to me that he believed it was. He had made a great sacrifice for his country. It was a proud sacrifice. And his country was more secure because of it. He, like countless other Americans, had risked life and limb to preserve Freedom -- to preserve the American Dream.

What is the American Dream? You who fought and bled for America should know. You who have grown comfortably rich in America should know. You who enjoy opportunity unlimited in America should know. But do you know? Do you know what is happening to her now? Are you concerned with her future?

There are danger signs everywhere about us today. Unrest and discontent plague the masses. Crime and violence threaten the safety of our city streets. Riots and demonstrations have become commonplace. Our moral and spiritual standards -- our national moral and spiritual standards -- have been seriously weakened, much to the delight of the Communist conspiracy. We find our Supreme Court has declared it unconstitutional to teach our children in the public schools that this great Nation was founded "to the glory of God and the advancement of the ... faith." And we find much of our citizenry totally unconcerned and totally unaware of what is taking place.

Now these are the dangers threatening America today. They are grave dangers -- that would happily see the end of our national traditions. What is happening to America today? Is her spirit dead? Is she now afraid to fight for Freedom? Will she fail to oppose her enemies?

This much is certain: the dangers will continue until we fully regain our determination to fulfill the American Dream; until we fully understand that America is a Nation under God, singularly blessed, singularly free; great among all nations of the earth. And we will be convinced of this fact only by recognizing and accepting America's special Covenant with God.

Yes, contrary to what the enemies of religion are striving to obscure today, America was founded as a "Nation under God." With this ideal before them, the Founding Fathers bravely declared their independence.

Those who signed the Charter of Liberty were deeply concerned about the rights bestowed upon men by the Creator. They called them "unalienable rights." They were rights that belonged to every man, regardless of his station. They were rights that made men free. The signers of the Declaration of Independence of Thomas Jefferson, "the God liberty." They were willing to fight and to die for this ideal. That is why in the closing lines of their Document of Freedom, "with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine providence," they pledged to each other "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor." And their pledged improved to be a costly one. Many fought. Many died. . .

But these men knew full well the risks involved. Nothing would dissuade them from the holy mission that pertained to God-given rights. After all, Christ did not sit with the Caesars. And they were not about to sit with King George. Christ did not cast lots with the money - changers. And they were not about to sell their souls -- or their freedom -- for a handful of change.

Do you know what happened to the men who signed the Declaration of Independence? Do you know the suffering they endured? The night before the Declaration was adopted, John Adams of Massachusetts wrote his wife: "I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure it will cost us to maintain this Declaration." And cost it did! Five were captured and tortured to death by the British. Nine others fought and died from wounds or hardship. Twelve had their homes pillaged and burned. Two lost their sons in battle.

Most of these early patriots were young men. In fact, eighteen of them were under thirty. They were responsible, God-fearing family men who came from all walks of life -- lawyers and judges, merchants and farmers. But all had one ideal in common: Freedom under God. And all knew that by signing the Declaration they would be hanged if caught. Not one Escaped Abuse! All Fifty - six Signers Sacrificed Dearly!

And what are you sacrificing to keep America free? Captain John Quinn sacrificed a leg. Countless Americans have sacrificed their lives. Is it asking too much of you today to understand your American heritage and to endeavor to pass it intact to succeeding generations? Is it asking too much of you to read your Constitution, your Bill of Rights, your Declaration of Independence? They are, after all, truly your documents of Freedom. And they will live only as you, Mr. and Mrs. John Doe, seek to give them life.

We cannot combat the threats to our sovereignty if we do not understand what America was, is, and must continue to be: a free Nation under God! We cannot insure peace for America by abandoning our principles and compromising with communism. You can't compromise with evil. We cannot insure Freedom for America by imitating the socialist state. You can't have Freedom in servitude.

You see, peace and Freedom are not the products of politics. They are the blessings of righteousness. "Righteousness alone exalteth a nation." "That nation only is blessed whose God is the Lord."

Cary Grant's Wife Takes out Divorce Papers

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The life of Gary Grant undertook two years ago as husband of an actress 33 years younger—and then as a first-time parent — is apparently over.

With the same stunning suddenness with which Grant and Dyan Cannon announced their July 22, 1965, marriage, Miss Cannon, now 30, sued the 63-year-old actor for divorce Tuesday. She asked for custody of their 18-month-old daughter Jennifer.

Miss Cannon, whom Grant courted for more than three years prior to their secret Las Vegas, Nev., wedding, charged the star of sophisticated comedy treated her in "a cruel and inhuman manner."

Although the suit said they separated last Dec. 28, it was the first public acknowledgement the marriage was in trouble. Reports of a rift in Grant's fourth marriage were heard in Hollywood last January but they had been seen dining together in recent months.

The Grants lived in a secluded fashion, seldom attending Hollywood parties. Their major diversion was attending baseball games at Dodger Stadium.

When he became a father for the first time at age 62, he appeared to enjoy the new role. He told an interviewer of rising early to watch the 7:30 a.m. feeding and returning from his studio office in time for the 7 p.m. feeding.

He said of Jennifer: "She's the most winsome, captivating girl I've ever known and I've known quite a few girls."

In the suit, Miss Cannon said her own income is only $400 a year from residuals and asked for $5,470 a month expenses for herself and Jennifer. Miss Cannon said she is presently under the care of a psychiatrist.

She estimated Grant's income as $500,000 a year and his wealth at more than $10 million.

Grant's previous wives were actress Virginia Cherrill, department store heiress Barbara Hutton and actress Betsy Drake.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS

The 2nd World War was over for the people of Frankfurt, Germany. U.S. forces had marched into the city without meeting much resistance. The people of Frankfurt were tired and hungry. For years we had lived on rationed food. It was in the years of 1943-1945 that the Russians living in guarded working camps and the French prisoners of war were marched past our window to work in the factory right around the corner.

My mother, an invalid, often used to sit watching by the window. She saw despair, weariness, and hunger in the eyes of these prisoners. Moved by what she saw, she would take pieces of bread or make sandwiches from the little she had and drop them as she could from the window to those passing.

The thought that she was endangering her life by what she was doing didn't worry her much. She wanted to help, and that is what she did for more than a year.

Then came the day when the tables were turned. Our nations had dwindled to a starvation diet. The war was over. The prisoners of war were freed. The displaced Russians were free. No more guards, no more barbed-wire fences, no more marches to the factory. Some celebrated their freedom by plundering all the stores of what was in them, by stealing, assaulting people, getting drunk.

We were free, too, in a sense, but our freedom had a bitter taste. "What now?" was the general feeling. My mother and I had one package of Jello to eat between the two of us.

I remember my mother getting into her wheel chair while I stayed at home, because it was not safe for a 14-year-old to go anywhere. She wanted to come home with some dandelion greens at least. After one hour my mother returned, her hands outstretched, tears rolling down her face. Someone had remembered the bread morsels and sandwiches she had given to those that once had less and had put into her empty hands bread, butter, and chicken, enough to eat until supplies came to the town that had experienced chaos.

Challenge of Service

"In the years ahead, capitalism's main challenge and its greatest opportunities will not lie in the mere satisfaction of the physical needs of man, great as those opportunities will be—great and growing. The challenges and opportunity will be in the providing of service, hardly dreamed of, in life preservation and extension, and life enrichment, in convenience and leisure and growth and the multiplication of choices men may make with the time at their disposal. Capitalism will, as it has in the past, be making the total use of science, of knowledge, of education and technology, in the interests, not of an elite but of all the people. And it is precisely this potency of capitalism that will bring about the rebirth of America's involvement in the challenges of underdevelopment in much of the rest of the world."

Man of Duty

ST. JOHN WADDELL
In the Commercial Appeal

He was a big, fine - looking man: Well over six feet tall with 200 pounds properly distributed over his powerful frame. His features were handsome, certainly not pretty. His face reflected determination, and purpose. There was often a twinkle in his eyes, for he had a real sense of humor.

He was subject to spells of hot anger, over which he established full control. He was equally self-possessed, and equally effective, in legislative halls, in the drawing room, in the savage wilderness and on the field of battle. He loved sports, and he loved his country.

He was born Feb. 22, 1732, in Virginia. His name was George Washington. He was the first president of the United States of America.

Fine as they were, physical and social attributes are not the reason his memory is revered. We observe the anniversary of his birth because his strength of character, his devotion to what he thought was right, and his steadfastness toward duty according to his lights made him the country's unquestioned leader of this country's revolution into the America of today.

George Washington had this characteristic: He would carefully and honestly analyze a situation; he would conscientiously determine in his own mind the right solution; he would stand by the result unwaveringly. He had borne arms under the British king, but he also was convinced of the fairness of Britain's actions toward the colonies. Rebellion and cheer of allegiance were things demanding scrupulous moral honesty, he believed, and not until his concept of honor approved the change did he make it. But once the step was taken, turning back was for him unthinkable and impossible.

To his brother he wrote: "In the matter of a full persuasion of the justice of our cause I cannot. . . entertain an idea that it will finally sink tho' it may remain for some time under a cloud." Because of his faith he had fortitude to meet overwhelming difficulties. To him, defeats were merely temporary setbacks; victories were just longer or shorter steps toward success.

It is not surprising that, because of his wisdom, many of the things advocated by Washington are just as important to his nation today. Because of his father's death, his formal schooling ended when he was about 16. But he always believed that education should be cherished universally, and in his will he made provisions for bequests to numerous institutions of learning.

One of his beliefs is particularly applicable to our own region today. He urged establishment of a national university and provided an endowment in his will. This idea was based on the "indescribable regret" with which he had "seen the youth of the United States migrating to foreign countries, in order to acquire the higher branches of erudition and to obtain knowledge of the sciences." His fear that they would be brainwashed with "maximums not congenial with republicanism" came not from doubt of republicanism, but from his perception of the danger of sending youth among other political systems before they had well learned the value of their own."

It should never be forgotten that George Washington, like many of his colleagues, put everything on the line when he wholly adopted the cause of American liberty. He was willing to, and did, risk fortune, standing and life itself for the cause he knew was right. His property was not inconsiderable, his family stood high in the colonies, his reputation was honorable. If he had lost, he would have lost all. Since he won, he won all for the United States and its heritage today.

He took a crowd of green, untrained patriots and molded them into an efficient fighting machine which defeated the armies of Britain, then one of the world's most powerful nations.

His writings prove his devoutness and knowlege of Scripture. He was an Anglican churchman and a loyal one; but he was no prude.

He enjoyed dancing, the theater, horseracing and other diversions of the times. He liked his glass of Madeira wine with a friend, or with several. He was an engaging companion much in demand. That he was something of a ladies' man is hinted by the remark of a Virginia woman to a friend that when General Washington becomes the chatty, agreeable companion, he can be downright impudent sometimes; such impudence, Fanny, as you and I like."

In the field, he seemed never to know the meaning of personal fear. His duty always came first.

Duty was not always easy. On one mission to deliver a fruitless ultimatum to the French near the shores of Lake Erie, when he and his guide started the return journey their horses gave out. They decided to walk all the way back to Virginia. On the way, Washington was shot at by a prowling French Indian, nearly drowned in crossing the ice-filled Allegheny, and nearly frozen from exposure.

Chateaubriand wrote that George Washington "aimed at that which it was his duty to aim at . . . blended his existence with that of his country. The name of Washington will spread with liberty from age to age."

We do well to honor an American like George Washington on the anniversary of his birth.

Lightest Mexico

By John Abney

Ixtapan de la Sal, Mexico—It appears that Mr. Arturo San Roman is a poet as well as a busy wheel in the business world. For the slogan of his new retirement colony here is "The Home of Your Dreams, Within Your Means."

And the reason for our sliding over here, aside from calming jaded nerves in his hot mineral baths, was to check his up-and-coming colony he is building for retired U.S. clients.

Mexico is in the process of setting up such colonies in several spots. Mr. San Roman, being a gentleman who is fast on the draw, got the jump and has already started his. Right next to his golf course and plush hotel looking up at the green mountains surrounding his health and take-it-easy resort.

Most of the other projects are still on the drawing board.

In addition to built-in scenery and climate (70 degree F. average all the time), he has put a number of model homes on the grounds and is weaving paved streets all around the real estate.

Eventually, states Mr. San Roman, there will be 250 homes ranging from two to four bedrooms. Tiled baths and the type of equipped kitchens ladies go for. Considerable built-in furniture which appeals to the master of the house since he doesn't have to move everything around for Spring cleaning.

Well, I asked Mr. San Roman how he makes it. But once the step was taken, turning back was asking me in letters; "Can a U.S. citizen own property here?"

And he said yes indeed. Legal titles and everything like up home. Furthermore, every house gets a walled patio for private sun tanning or a barbecue. Fountains and personal swimming pools if you want them.

Then he said look over here. That's where we're building the club house with a restaurant, soda fountain, recreation center and plenty of fun facilities.

"You want to play a round of golf?" he asked. He has more dynamite than an Atlas missile.

It is a gorgeous course with ponds and Japanese-type bridges. But I forgot (on purpose) my clubs. Anyhow I would rather soak up radioactive relaxation in his 102.2 F. waters. This conserves what energy is left in my threadbare carcass.

So he said, "We have nothing but purified water everywhere. Built our own plant up yonder on the mountain and there isn't a bug in the entire contraption."

And electricity. Mr. San Roman put in his own power plant with an auxiliary unit in case lightning hits the fan.

"How about groceries?" I asked. This being one of my chief concerns three times a day.

And he said, "We have our own truck farm. Raise all the food for the hotel customers and right over there at the shopping center we're building a modern supermarket.

"Also," he added, "a couple can live here comfortably for about $125 U.S. a month each, including payments on the house." (Runs about $80 a month, depending on the size and contents).

Ixtapan not only has a view and weather, it has history. Centuries ago the Aztec emperors discovered the hot springs and used to ride a portable throne over the mountains to pump up energy and recover from whatever ailed them.

When Mr. San Roman came rolling into town around 1946 he figured it had a future. And he set about building his hotel Ixtapan, the swimming pools and the Roman baths where you wallow in a private king size tub full of hot mineral water. Onyx walls with low lights and piped in music.

And I looked about his new colony and began counting the change in my hip pocket bank. This took three fingers and about 35 seconds.

Oh well, maybe one day.

A sale was in progress in a Boston store, and a white-haired gentleman in a narrow-brimmed homburg approached the saleswoman at the counter. With the merest gesture, he indicated one of the billfolds on the counter. "The price, please?"

"That's a real bargain," said the clerk. "It's reduced to $12.50."

"Rather costly, I should say," "It's genuine walrus, sir! It will last forever."

"But I will not," he said crisply. A wasteful investment averted, he marched away.

The morning has a melody
In every tree that grows
Because the mockingbirds can voice
The sound of sun and rose;
I breathe their melodies at dawn
And feed my soul the song
Of rhapsody they conjure up—
It lasts my whole day long.

The joyousness they put to air
I translate for my morning prayer.

Cary Grant's Wife Takes out Divorce Papers

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The life of Cary Grant undertook two years ago as husband of an actress 33 years younger—and then as a first-time parent — is apparently over.

With the same stunning suddenness with which Grant and Dyan Cannon announced their July 22, 1965, marriage, Miss Cannon, now 30, sued the 63-year-old actor for divorce Tuesday. She asked for custody of their 18-month-old daughter Jennifer.

Miss Cannon, whom Grant courted for more than three years prior to their secret Las Vegas, Nev., wedding, charged the star of sophisticated comedy treated her in "a cruel and inhuman manner."

Although the suit said they separated last Dec. 28, it was the first public acknowledgement the marriage was in trouble. Reports of a rift in Grant's fourth marriage were heard in Hollywood last January but they had been seen dining together in recent months.

The Grants lived in a secluted fashion, seldom attending Hollywood parties. Their major diversion was attending baseball games at Dodger Stadium.

When he became a father for the first time at age 62, he appeared to enjoy the new role. He told an interviewer of rising early to watch the 7:30 a.m. feeding and returning from his studio office in time for the 7 p.m. feeding.

He said of Jennifer: "She's the most winsome, captivating girl I've ever known and I've known quite a few girls."

In the suit, Miss Cannon said her own income is only $400 a year from residuals and asked for $5,470 a month expenses for herself and Jennifer. Miss Cannon said she is presently under the care of a psychiatrist.

She estimated Grant's income as $500,000 a year and his wealth at more than $10 million.

Grant's previous wives were actress Virginia Cherrill, dime-store heiress Barbara Hutton and actress Betsy Drake.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS

The 2nd World War was over for the people of Frankfurt, Germany. U.S. forces had marched into the city without meeting much resistance. The people of Frankfurt were tired and hungry. For years we had lived on rationed food. It was in the years of 1943-1945 that the Russians living in guarded working camps and the French prisoners of war were marched past our window to work in the factory right around the corner.

My mother, an invalid, often used to sit watching by the window. She saw despair, weariness, and hunger in the eyes of these prisoners. Moved by what she saw, she would take hunks of bread or make sandwiches from the little she had and drop them as she could from the window to those passing.

The thought that she was endangering her life by what she was doing didn't worry her much. She wanted to help, and that is what she did for more than a year.

Then came the day when the tables were turned. Our rations had dwindled to a starvation diet. The war was over. The prisoners of war were freed. The displaced Russians were free. No more guards, no more barbed-wire fences, no more marches to the factory. Some celebrated their freedom by plundering all the stores of what was in them, by stealing, assaulting people, getting drunk.

We were free, too, in a sense, but our freedom had a bitter taste. "What now?" was the general feeling. My mother and I had one package of Jello to eat between the two of us.

I remember my mother getting into her wheel chair while I stayed at home, because it was not safe for a 14-year-old to go anywhere. She wanted to come home with some dandelion greens at least. After one hour my mother returned, her hands outstretched, tears rolling down her face. Someone had remembered the bread morsels and sandwiches she had given to those that once had less and had put into her empty hands bread, butter, and chicken, enough to eat until supplies came to the town that had experienced chaos.

Challenge of Service

"In the years ahead, capitalism's main challenge and its greatest opportunities will not lie in the mere satisfaction of the physical needs of man, great as those opportunities will be—great and growing. The challenges and opportunity will be in the providing of service, hardly dreamed of, in life preservation and extension, and life enrichment, in convenience and leisure and growth and the multiplication of choices men may make with the time at their disposal. Capitalism will, as it has in the past, be making the total use of science, of knowledge, of education and technology, in the interests, not of an elite but of all the people. And it is precisely this potency of capitalism that will bring about the rebirth of America's involvement in the challenges of underdevelopment in much of the rest of the world."

Man of Duty

ST. JOHN WADDELL
In the Commercial Appeal

He was a big, fine - looking man: Well over six feet tall with 200 pounds properly distributed over his powerful frame. His features were handsome, certainly not pretty. His face reflected determination, and purpose. There was often a twinkle in his eyes, for he had a real sense of humor.

He was subject to spells of hot anger, over which he established full control. He was equally self-possessed, and equally effective, in legislative halls, in the drawing room, in the savage wilderness and on the field of battle. He loved sports, and he loved his country.

He was born Feb. 22, 1732, in Virginia. His name was George Washington. He was the first president of the United States of America.

Fine as they were, physical and social attributes are not the reason his memory is revered. We observe the anniversary of his birth because his strength of character, his devotion to what he thought was right, and his steadfastness toward duty according to his lights made him the country's unquestioned leader of this country's revolution into America of today.

George Washington had this characteristic: He would carefully and honestly analyze a situation; he would conscientiously determine in his own mind the right solution; he would stand by the result unwaveringly. He had borne arms under the British king, but he also was convinced of the fairness of Britain's actions toward the colonies. Rebellion and change of allegiance were things demanding scrupulous moral honesty, he believed, and not until his concept of honor approved the change did he make it. But once the step was taken, turning back was for him unthinkable and impossible.

To his brother he wrote: "Under a full persuasion of the justice of our cause I cannot entertain an idea that it will finally sink tho' it may remain for some time under a cloud." Because of his faith he had fortitude to meet overwhelming difficulties. To him, defeats were merely temporary setbacks; victories were just longer or shorter steps toward success.

It is not surprising that, because of his wisdom, many of the things advocated by Washington are just as important to his nation today. Because of his father's death, his formal schooling ended when he was about 16, but he always believed that education should be cherished universally, and in his will he made provisions for boards of learning.

One of his beliefs is particularly applicable to our own region today. He urged establishment of a national university and provided an endowment in his will. This idea was based on the "indescribable regret" with which he had "seen the youth of the United States emigrating to foreign countries, in order to acquire the higher branches of erudition and to obtain a knowledge of the sciences." His fear that they would be brainwashed with "maxims not congenial with republicanism" came not from doubt of republicanism, but from his perception of the danger of sending youth among other political systems before they "had well learned the value of their own."

It should never be forgotten that George Washington, like many of his colleagues, put everything on the line when he wholly adopted the cause of American liberty. He was willing to, and did, risk fortune, standing and life itself for the cause he knew was right. His property was not inconsiderable, his family stood high in the colonies, his reputation was honorable. If he had lost, he would have lost all. # Desi Returns As Producer And Director

DEL MAR, Calif. (AP) — Desi Arnaz, in the period following his divorce from Lucille Ball, sold his stock in Desilu, quit show business and retired to his horse farm, his boat, the track and golf course. He stood it for three years, but now he's back with both feet— and seems a little surprised.

"Things that got me where I was were the things I couldn't do when I got there," said the man who built a camera technique and a comedy series into a giant production company, Desilu, and a fortune.

Arnaz, now in his early fifties, has picked up some weight and his hair shows considerably more salt than pepper. After three years in retirement and two developing new shows he was lured back into television as producer and director of NBC's new comedy series, "The Mothers-in-Law," and has even been persuaded to act in one of the episodes.

After directing the first eight episodes, he is sidelined at his beach home at this Pacific Ocean resort recuperating from a freak accident which almost took his life. A veranda on which he was sitting collapsed and threw him against a metal stake, puncturing his side and requiring emergency surgery.

"I got where I didn't want to be because things began parlaying," said Arnaz, lighting a slim cigar and squinting at the ocean through dark glasses.

"We had a little studio and 'I Love Lucy' and then to compete we had to get a larger studio and from there on we had to get out or get bigger. We wound up with three big studios. But by 1962 I decided I didn't want to be Lew Wasserman (head of Universal Studios). I wanted to be Willie Wyler (a top film director)."

But for three years, Desi was neither. But his attention inevitably was caught by a book which he thought would make a good movie. Soon William Paley, chairman of the Columbia Broadcasting System, called him, Arnaz said, and asked if he really intended to return to work— outside television.

"No more rat race," Desi told him. "No more wanting things day before yesterday."

"It takes three years to get even in television while losing $5,000 or $10,000 a year," he explained. "I was even then and I didn't know anything about comedy shows with gimmicks where the people take pills or live in bottles. . . Comedy is where you pile one joke on top of another joke, and people laugh.

But the result was that Desi Arnaz returned to television, signed by CBS, his old network, to develop shows. And the first venture was based on an idea that had been kicking around Desilu since "I Love Lucy" days.

He first managed to get back Bob Carroll Jr. and Madelyn Davis who had written all 180 original Lucy shows. Eve Arden was added as the star comedienne, and although not Desi's first choice, Kaye Ballard joined her when Arnaz saw her performing in a night club.

The show was called "The Mothers-in-Law." Then CBS and a rich, important sponsor interested him in finding a situation comedy for Carol Channing. Everything seemed to be going swimmingly.

He planned to use the three-camera, live-on-film technique, made before a studio audience, which he developed for "I Love Lucy."

But then the come-back story of Desi Arnaz took an unexpected turn. First "The Carol Channing Show" was dropped— then CBS turned thumbs down on "The Mothers-in-Law."

Bullets Thrown Into Blaze Injure Boy

CARUTHERSVILLE - Throwing .22 caliber bullets into a fire can be dangerous as Timmy Thorton of West Washington, Hayti, found out. He is now in Baptist Hospital, Memphis, with a fragment of a .22 shell casing lodged next to his lung.

The accident occurred Tuesday at 7 p.m. when the nine-year-old youth was playing with another friend near a trash fire. Harold Thorton, Timmy's father, said that the neighbor threw .22 shells into the fire. Timmy, not knowing the danger, stayed close to the fire while the other boy ran.

The shells went off, seemingly together, and a casing fragment from one of the shells struck the Thorton youngster and imbedded itself into the muscle next to the right lung.

The boy was taken to Pemiscot Memorial Hospital, Hayti, where he received emergency treatment and was transferred to the Memphis hospital. The boy was reported in good condition.

Three hours of surgery Thursday at Memphis failed to remove the fragment. Doctors are trying to decide whether to operate again or to leave the fragment where it is.

Bidding Begins For Cigarette Filter Rights

NEW YORK (AP)— Columbia University, in the cigarette filter business through a strange sequence of events, is negotiating with a dozen tobacco companies but the dollars-and-cents dickering has scarcely started, a spokesman said today.

The subject of negotiations is the Strickman filter, claimed by its inventor, Robert L. Strickman, to be 70 per cent more effective than the filters now in use.

Strickman, who developed the filter in a laboratory in Hillsdale, N.J., says he offered it to Columbia after he failed to even get into the offices of major American tobacco firms in his effort to sell it.

Proceeds from Columbia's half interest are to be used for education and research, including cancer research. Estimates of possible proceeds range up to $100 million a year.

Testimony concerning the filter is to be given to the Senate Commerce Committee Thursday by Dr. Grayson Kirk, president of Columbia, and Drs. Donald Tapley and Cushman Haagensen, medical consultants to the university on the project.

The committee, headed by Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., opens hearings today on smoking hazards and efforts to make cigarettes less dangerous to health.

John E. D. Grunow, former cement company executive named a special assistant to Kirk to handle commercial aspects of the Strickman project, said that in addition to the six major American tobacco manufactures, a number of foreign tobacco firms have started discussions with Columbia about purchase of rights to the filter.

Columbia has had the filter tested by an independent Manhattan laboratory. Results reportedly confirmed Strickman's tests.

Columbia also has conducted tests which officials say indicate that the Strickman filter could be produced at about the same cost as filters now in use, and has run tests on the comparative taste of cigarettes with the Strickman and other filters.

While carrying out the trash the other day, I ran into a four-year-old neighbor, Jerry, with a little boy that I didn't know. I asked Jerry to introduce his friend.

"This is Mike," said Jerry, "and he's only four."

"But Jerry, you're only four," I replied.

Doctor Who Developed Birth Control Pill Dies

BOSTON (AP) — The drive back to Worcester from New York on a winter's day in 1950 had been a long one, but instead of going straight home, Dr. Gregory Pincus went to his research laboratories, so great was the challenge he had been requested to perform.

The day before, at the urging of Margaret Sanger, founder of the Planned Parenthood Federation, and his physician-friend Abraham Stone of the federation, Dr. Pincus had agreed to undertake research that would seek an entirely new, more reliable method of birth control for women.

Returning to the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, which he and Dr. Hudson Hoagland had founded in 1944, Dr. Pincus and close associates began planning the research project that would lead to development of the first practical oral contraceptive pill.

Tuesday, 10 years after the pill he developed was approved by the Food and Drug Administration for use in treating threatened abortion and menstrual disorders and seven years after its approval as a prescription contraceptive, Dr. Pincus died at age 64.

Peter Bent Brigham Hospital listed the cause of death as myeloid metaplasia, a disease of the blood and spleen akin to leukemia.

Although he achieved worldwide fame for his contraceptive pill Dr. Pincus also developed estrone, a hormone used in treating breast cancer, and was recognized as an authority on both the reproductive cycles of mammals and sex hormones.

A $2,100 grant from the Planned Parenthood Research Fund started research on the contraceptive pill.

In determining the goals for a new approach to birth control, Dr. Pincus rejected the idea of painful and potentially expensive injections and settled on a pill as the ideal physiological contraceptive.

His approach centered on progesterone— a hormone, or one of the chemical controllers of body processes— which is secreted by a woman's ovaries in large quantities after ovulation.

Working with Dr. Min-chueh Chang, who conducted the experimental observations on rabbits and rats, Dr. Pincus demonstrated that progesterone administered orally could inhibit ovulation in animals.

Then in collaboration with Dr. John Rock at the Free Hospital for Women in Boston, Dr. Pincus began to apply the work to humans— using progesterone compounds first to correct infertility in women.

The large doses of progesterone required to inhibit ovulation were a drawback for its uses as a contraceptive, however, and Dr. Pincus began a search for a progesterone-like compound that could be effective in small doses. He and Dr. Chang tested almost 200 compounds that had been supplied by drug manufacturers and selected a handful that were most effective. Then they did the chemical analysis work which described a progesterone-like compound that combined the best chemical features of those they had experimented with. The result was a pill marketed under the trade name Enovid.

Dr. Pincus, a native of Woodbine, N.J., is survived by his widow, Elizabeth; a son, John, of Washington; a daughter, Mrs. Michael Bernard of Cambridge; three brothers and a sister.

Hot? Thirsty? Suffering through sultry summer days? What you need is a refreshing, vitamin C cooler -- a tingling glass of orange juice or some thirst-quenching orange beverage!

Orange juice needn't be reserved for breakfasts or special occasions. Like a basic dress, it will go anywhere, any time of day or night.

A glass of pure and simple orange juice will please almost anyone with a summertime thirst. What's more it is one of the most nutritious beverages you can offer when someone in your family needs to wet his whistle.

Add some spices, fruit or ice cream, and that same flavorful juice will be dressed up for entertaining guests, or serving the family a special treat.

By all means keep a jugful of orange juice in your refrigerator, ready to serve. You'll find it a ready answer to family thirsts and refreshments for surprise guests.

You'll also find it a boon to your food budget, for orange juice, particularly frozen concentrate, is quite attractively priced these days. Supplies are such that the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Consumer and Marketing Service is listing canned, fresh and frozen concentrated orange juice among our currently most plentiful foods.

Polka Dot Ice Cubs are made by pouring orange or grapefruit juice in ice cub trays. Place a fresh strawberry, raspberry, blackberry or blueberry in each section. Freeze until firm.

SPICED ICE TEA

6 whole cloves
8 whole allspice
1/2 cup sugar
2 teaspoons lemon juice

Desi Returns As Producer And Director

DEL MAR, Calif. (AP) — Desi Arnaz, in the period following his divorce from Lucille Ball, sold his stock in Desilu, quit show business and retired to his horse farm, his boat, the track and golf course. He stood it for three years, but now he's back with both feet—and seems a little surprised.

"Things that got me where I was were the things I couldn't do when I got there," said the man who built a camera technique and a comedy series into a giant production company, Desilu, and a fortune.

Arnaz, now in his early fifties, has picked up some weight and his hair shows considerably more salt than pepper. After three years in retirement and two developing new shows he was lured back into television as producer and director of NBC's new comedy series, "The Mothers-in-Law," and has even been persuaded to act in one of the episodes.

After directing the first eight episodes, he is sidelined at his beach home at this Pacific Ocean resort recuperating from a freak accident which almost took his life. A veranda on which he was sitting collapsed and threw him against a metal stake, puncturing his side and requiring emergency surgery.

"I got where I didn't want to be because things began parlaying," said Arnaz, lighting a slim cigar and squinting at the ocean through dark glasses.

"We had a little studio and 'I Love Lucy' and then to compete we had to get a larger studio and from there on we had to get out or get bigger. We wound up with three big studios. But by 1962 I decided I didn't want to be Lew Wasserman (head of Universal Studios). I wanted to be Willie Wyler (a top film director)."

But for three years, Desi was neither. But his attention inevitably was caught by a book which he thought would make a good movie. Soon William Paley, chairman of the Columbia Broadcasting System, called him, Arnaz said, and asked if he really intended to return to work—outside television.

"No more rat race," Desi told him. "No more wanting things day before yesterday."

"It takes three years to get even in television while losing $5,000 or $10,000 a year," he explained. "I was even then and I didn't know anything about comedy shows with gimmicks where the people take pills or live in bottles. . . Comedy is where you pile one joke on top of another joke, and people laugh.

But the result was that Desi Arnaz returned to television, signed by CBS, his old network, to develop shows. And the first venture was based on an idea that had been kicking around Desilu since "I Love Lucy" days.

He first managed to get back Bob Carroll Jr. and Madelyn Davis who had written all 180 original Lucy shows. Eve Arden was added as the star comedienne, and although not Desi's first choice, Kaye Ballard joined her when Arnaz saw her performing in a night club.

The show was called "The Mothers-in-Law." Then CBS and a rich, important sponsor interested him in finding a situation comedy for Carol Channing. Everything seemed to be going swimmingly.

He planned to use the three-camera, live-on-film technique, made before a studio audience, which he developed for "I Love Lucy."

But then the come-back story of Desi Arnaz took an unexpected turn. First "The Carol Channing Show" was dropped—then CBS turned thumbs down on "The Mothers-in-Law."

Bullets Thrown Into Blaze Injure Boy

CARUTHERSVILLE - Throwing .22 caliber bullets into a fire can be dangerous as Timmy Thorton of West Washington, Hayti, found out. He is now in Baptist Hospital, Memphis, with a fragment of a .22 shell casing lodged next to his lung.

The accident occurred Tuesday at 7 p.m. when the nine-year-old youth was playing with another friend near a trash fire. Harold Thorton, Timmy's father, said that the neighbor threw .22 shells into the fire. Timmy, not knowing the danger, stayed close to the fire while the other boy ran.

The shells went off, seemingly together, and a casing fragment from one of the shells struck the Thorton youngster and imbedded itself into the muscle next to the right lung.

The boy was taken to Pemiscot Memorial Hospital, Hayti, where he received emergency treatment and was transferred to the Memphis hospital. The boy was reported in good condition.

Three hours of surgery Thursday at Memphis failed to remove the fragment. Doctors are trying to decide whether to operate again or to leave the fragment where it is.

Two Pemiscot Boys Die in

CARUTHERSVILLE--The accidental deaths of two small Pemiscot county children, boys, were reported Saturday by Coroner Jimmy Osburn, who was called to investigate both cases but did not hold inquests since cause of death was obvious in each instance.

The first was that of 11-month old William Earl Walker, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Walker, who are tenant farmers on land owned by Clyde Southern on Steele Route 3.

The baby was playing in the yard shortly after noon Friday when he apparently came in contact with a pole supporting a tv antenna and was electrocuted.

Osburn said the pole was checked by workmen from Ark-Mo Power Company, who reported that it contained a current of 125 volts of electricity.

The child's funeral will be Saturday morning with German Funeral Home of Steele in charge.

The other death was that of two-year-old James Warren, whose mother, Eula Mae Warren, found him smothered in bed about two a.m. Saturday.

Osburn said the child was sleeping in a bed with four other children and was found wrapped up in a blanket between the bed and a wall. The family live at 307 East 14th Street.

Carter Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.

Loungewear For Trousseau

By HELEN HENNESSY
Women's Editor
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

NEW YORK—(NEA)—Fall is a big season for weddings and the season offers good news for the bride who is getting together her loungewear trousseau. The romantic long gown is back.

Twiggy, mini and groovy styles may reign supreme by day, but in the late quiet hours, at-home clothes have never looked more elegant and feminine.

What's around right now in romance via the clothes line? If you're slender, empire gowns gathered under the bosom with tucks, ribbons or gathers are great. Body skimming shifts often slit to the hip, free flowing tents, Far Eastern caftans, palazzo pajamas and swishy culotte dresses are right for any figure type. Tall brides look glamorous in ankle-length Grecian-styled skims that enhance their statuesque appearance.

BRIDAL BOUQUET tossed on tricot in a profusion of pink morning glories (left) provides the delicate print for this lace-trimmed, ankle-length robe. Elegant caftan traced in lace (right) is worn over a silky white column of bridal beauty. These are of Burlington tricot by Lucie Ann.

Gone are the wishy-washy pastels. Trousseau loungewear now comes in strong true shades like sunny yellow, lush peach, bright grass green, deep pink and jungle violet. The colors solo or combine into zingy stripes. Pucci-type prints, geometric and abstract patterns.

Ankle-length peignoir sets, robes and gowns have been gone from the bridal fashion scene because of the time and effort needed to keep them bandbox fresh. But fabric manufacturers today have played Cupid and created luxurious man-made tricot fabrics for all of the latest at-home looks. Machine washable and dryable tricot fashions need little if any ironing.

And "after the honeymoon is over" the stereotyped tableau of the young wife wearing a wrinkled robe over a droopy, faded gown as she serves breakfast to a husband hidden behind the morning paper is a thing of the past.

Today's loungewear will catch and keep his eye only on her. And that's where she wants it.

Back to School in Style

PULLOVER DRESS in cotton knit by Smartee (left) answers the question of what to wear back to school for fall '67. A-shaped, long-sleeved and regimental-striped in red, yellow, navy and white this fashion is in a class by itself. The contemporary schoolgirl look (right), cleverly conceived by Junior House of Milwaukee, combines a bright yellow broadcloth shirt with a navy cotton homespun suit. Brass buttons fasten the cardigan jacket and the front-paneled skirt that hides a culotte.

YOUNG SOPHISTICATES get today's fashion message from free-wheeling designs. For the gal who likes a finely etched look about her clothes this wool knit stripe slim dress (left) is lightly accented with corded neck and hemline and hip-riding pretzel pocket. Free-wheeling stripes of the brown and silver silk and rayon blend dress (right) are encircled with a tiny sliver of belt. These designs are by Umba for Dorothy Hubbs/Donle.

Longest Cathedral

Winchester Cathedral, located in the city of Winchester, county of Southhampton, England, was built in the second half of the 7th century and is the longest cathedral in England. It is almost 556 feet in length, according to the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Gondolas were made necessary as a method of transportation in Venice, Italy, because the city is actually built on an archipelago of islands and mud flats. All gondolas in Venice had to be painted black by an ordinance of the Venetian senate in 1562.

Loungewear For Trousseau

By HELEN HENNESSY
Women's Editor
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

NEW YORK—(NEA)—Fall is a big season for weddings and the season offers good news for the bride who is getting together her loungewear trousseau. The romantic long gown is back.

Twiggy, mini and groovy styles may reign supreme by day, but in the late quiet hours, at-home clothes have never looked more elegant and feminine.

What's around right now in romance via the clothes line? If you're slender, empire gowns gathered under the bosom with tucks, ribbons or gathers are great. Body skimming shifts often slit to the hip, free flowing tents, Far Eastern caftans, palazzo pajamas and swishy culotte dresses are right for any figure type. Tall brides look glamorous in ankle-length Grecian-styled skims that enhance their statuesque appearance.

BRIDAL BOUQUET tossed on tricot in a profusion of pink morning glories (left) provides the delicate print for this lace-trimmed, ankle-length robe. Elegant caftan traced in lace (right) is worn over a silky white column of bridal beauty. These are of Burlington tricot by Lucie Ann.

Gone are the wishy-washy pastels. Trousseau loungewear now comes in strong true shades like sunny yellow, lush peach, bright grass green, deep pink and jungle violet. The colors solo or combine into zingy stripes. Pucci-type prints, geometric and abstract patterns.

Ankle-length peignoir sets, robes and gowns have been gone from the bridal fashion scene because of the time and effort needed to keep them bandbox fresh. But fabric manufacturers today have played Cupid and created luxurious man-made tricot fabrics for all of the latest at-home looks. Machine washable and dryable tricot fashions need little if any ironing.

And "after the honeymoon is over" the stereotyped tableau of the young wife wearing a wrinkled robe over a droopy, faded gown as she serves breakfast to a husband hidden behind the morning paper is a thing of the past.

Today's loungewear will catch and keep his eye only on her. And that's where she wants it.

Back to School in Style

PULLOVER DRESS in cotton knit by Smartee (left) answers the question of what to wear back to school for fall '67. A-shaped, long-sleeved and regimental-striped in red, yellow, navy and white this fashion is in a class by itself. The contemporary schoolgirl look (right), cleverly conceived by Junior House of Milwaukee, combines a bright yellow broadcloth shirt with a navy cotton homespun suit. Brass buttons fasten the cardigan jacket and the front-paneled skirt that hides a culotte.

YOUNG SOPHISTICATES get today's fashion message from free-wheeling designs. For the gal who likes a finely etched look about her clothes this wool knit stripe slim dress (left) is lightly accented with corded neck and hemline and hip-riding pretzel pocket. Free-wheeling stripes of the brown and silver silk and rayon blend dress (right) are encircled with a tiny sliver of belt. These designs are by Umba for Dorothy Hubbs/Donie.

Longest Cathedral

Winchester Cathedral, located in the city of Winchester, county of Southhampton, England, was built in the second half of the 7th century and is the longest cathedral in England. It is almost 556 feet in length, according to the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Gondolas were made necessary as a method of transportation in Venice, Italy, because the city is actually built on an archipelago of islands and mud flats. All gondolas in Venice had to be painted black by an ordinance of the Venetian senate in 1562.

Letters to the Editor

Aug. 22, 1967

Dear Editor:

Would you please print this letter.

I attended a county school board meeting along with about seventy-five other New Madrid County residents on Aug. 18, 1967. I am only a voter of New Madrid County and I am beginning to wonder if this is anything to be proud of, since our local paper (Sikeston Standard) states that we have a political boss in our county. I believe you will find that the dictionary defines the word boss to mean a cow or calf, but I believe in this case the definition that fits best would be a person who controls a political organization, I don't believe any one person should be allowed to control a group of people, or I don't think six people should control a group of people either, I think we should be informed of what is going on, and then the majority should rule.

Bill Dillon told the group of people at the school board meeting that the public had been informed of this plan to reorganize the county schools, before our school board voted, five to one in favor of the proposed reorganization. Mr. Dillon, I carried one of those petitions. I asked ninety seven people to read it and to sign it if they so wished, ninety five signed it, and at least eighty voluntarily told me they knew nothing about it. A few told me they had read in the paper about the meeting (I also attended) at Delmo when Mr. Conran explained the reorganization plan. But at this time our school board had already voted, and I have yet to meet a person that knew the school board was going to vote on such a plan until they already had.

The five hundred and seventy five people who signed these petitions only are asking for a chance to vote, so the people of our district can decide for ourselves what is best for our children, we need the best education we can give our children, and the closest to home.

I understand Sikeston has only offered us an education for our children. We are not asking for a position or anything of this sort, most of us are accustomed to working for a living, we are just asking for a chance to give our children the best education.

Mr. Dillon, Mr. Crumpecker, Mr. Sherrard, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Menees, all we want is a chance to vote - a New Madrid County mother of four school children.

Ann Landers

Inactivity Bores Couple

Dear Ann Landers: My husband and I have a nice home, well-furnished, a new car and money in the bank. Our two sons have finished college, are happily married and doing well. We have excellent jobs and our combined income makes it possible for us to live comfortably.

So why am I writing to Ann Landers? Because suddenly we find life empty and boring. We have no goals, nothing to struggle for. We were much happier when we had to worry about house payments, taxes, mortgages and tuition bills.

Are we different or does this happen to all couples in the twilight years? We need answers. --THE W'S

Dear W's: You need more than answers. You need to get out of your fur-lined, insulated world and become involved with some causes or projects or people to whom you can devote your time, energy and your money.

Contentment does not come from lapping up creature comforts and taking life easy. But this you already know, since this is the thrust of the problem as you have expressed it. Get busy and find out how to make your lives count for something. The world needs what you have to offer. And you need to become dues-paying members of the human race.

Dear Ann Landers: Several weeks ago, three of us (all college students) borrowed a buddy's car. I was driving. Unfortunately, we had an accident. Nobody was hurt but the damage to our buddy's car amounted to $175. There was no insurance so the money had to come out of my pocket. I think the two fellows with me should help with the repair bill. They say, "No. You were driving."

Is this fair? Answer in the paper because if my folks see a letter from you and find out I had another accident, I'll get grounded for life. - - BIG D

Dear D.: Another accident, eh? It sound as if you've got quite a history, fella. Maybe you SHOULD be grounded until you are taking some driving lessons, and I am not kidding.

First, I'd like to make it clear that anyone who drives without insurance is a moron. Second, you don't say who was at fault but I have an idea you were. In this case, your passengers should not be expected to pitch in. If someone had hit you and you were blameless I'd agree with you, but not under these circumstances.

Dear Ann Landers: My husband plays ball with the "boys" (about age 40) one night a week and comes home around 2:00 A.M.

Others nights he gets home anywhere from 7:30 to 11 P.M. He hasn't had dinner with me and our four teen-agers in three years.

This man has never brought home an extra dime for overtime and he hasn't had a raise in 10 years. I've been typing papers at home so we can pay our bills. Should I wake up and smell the coffee? -- QUIET DESPERATION

Dear Quiet -- Or are you unconscious? Did you just notice that your husband hasn't had dinner with his children in three years? It's going to be difficult to get him to stop doing whatever he's doing -- after all this time. You need more help than I can offer. I suggest a professional counselor. Yes, I know, he won't go. So go yourself and learn what you can do to get this 40-year-old teenybopper to behave like a husband and a father.

What is French kissing? Is it wrong? Who should set the necking limits -- the boy or the girl? Can a shotgun wedding succeed? Read Ann Landers' booklet, "Teen-age Sex - - Ten Ways To Cool It." Send 50¢ in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

If You Were the Judge

Husband Must Support Test Tube Infant

Lois and Marvin had been married for a number of years but their marriage produced no crops. Disappointed, Lois appealed to Marvin to allow her to have a test tube baby, and he reluctantly consented. Unfortunately, while science may solve one problem, it sometimes creates ten others. When the baby came, Marvin left.

Left stranded at the bassinette, Lois sued Marvin for his running out on her and demanded that he be ordered to support "their" child.

"It's not my kid," was Marvin's answer. "As far as I'm concerned, it's as illegitimate as a three dollar bill."

"That's not so," protested Lois. "Since he consented to my having the baby, he can't turn his back on it. It's 'our' child and he's got to support it."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you require Marvin to support the test tube child?

This is how the judge ruled: He held that Marvin's consent to the scientific baby did not make it any more legitimate than if he had consented to his wife's having a lover. But, the judge added, since he consented to its being born, he implied agreement to support the child and he must do so.

Scott County HealthCenter

1966 Annual Report

In Scott County we have developed the philosophy that regulations are instructional tools-- to accomplish reasonable comfort and reasonable safety rather than inspection check procedures.

Simple inspection procedures will not generally lead to up grading and will only lead to forced perpetual compliance with existing minimum standards.

Therefore, to provide for improvement, we in Scott County:

1. Hold annual food personnel training school for waitresses and cooks.
2. Hold dairy producer meetings and also meet frequently with plant personnel.
3. Work with City Councils to promote up-to-date ordinances concerning milk, food, garbage and refuse, insects and rodents, water and air pollution and many other health related problems.
4. Attend in-service training programs.

By providing a pleasant working climate between our office and all officials, we reflect a good compromise between what is ideal and what is reasonable.

The Scott County Sanitation programs cover a great number of minor activities that are too numerous to mention. Our years of experience, education, and training make us qualified to handle directly all phases of environmental sanitation.

Environmental sanitation involves the control of your environment in order to prevent disease outbreaks. This job involves a great many health fields. Your local Health Department carries out work in approximately 34 major health fields to control health hazards in your environment. If you will take but a moment to look over this list of health fields, you will realize what a vast job environmental sanitation is.

Kennedy Not Ready to Give Up Arms Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, defeated in a Senate skirmish over firearms legislation, said today the setback does not indicate that President Johnson's gun control proposal is doomed.

But a Republican foe of the administration measure said the Senate decision to continue the Pentagon's civilian marksmanship program pointed in that direction.

"I think it is an indication of the attitude of the Senate on matters of this kind," Sen. Roman L. Hruska, R.Neb., said in an interview.

Kennedy tried Tuesday to eliminate from the defense appropriations bill funds for operation of the 65-year-old civilian marksmanship program, administered by the National Rifle Association.

The Senate voted 67 to 23 against his amendment, which also would have halted free distribution of ammunition to NRA marksmen's clubs and their nearly 385,000 members.

Kennedy, a Massachusetts Democrat, said the program is costing the government $5 to $10 million a year, and based his argument on economy.

The Pentagon has estimated its cost at about $4 million, and has said the Johnson gun control measure would not interfere with operation of the program.

Kennedy issued a statement

Letters to the Editor

Aug. 22, 1967

Dear Editor:

Would you please print this letter.

I attended a county school board meeting along with about seventy-five other New Madrid County residents on Aug. 18, 1967. I am only a voter of New Madrid County and I am beginning to wonder if this is anything to be proud of, since our local paper (Sikeston Standard) states that we have a political boss in our county. I believe you will find that the dictionary defines the word boss to mean a cow or calf, but I believe in this case the definition that fits best would be a person who controls a political organization, I don't believe any one person should be allowed to control a group of people, or I don't think six people should control a group of people either, I think we should be informed of what is going on, and then the majority should rule.

Bill Dillon told the group of people at the school board meeting that the public had been informed of this plan to reorganize the county schools, before our school board voted, five to one in favor of the proposed reorganization. Mr. Dillon, I carried one of those petitions. I asked ninety seven people to read it and to sign it if they so wished, ninety five signed it, and at least eighty voluntarily told me they knew nothing about it. A few told me they had read in the paper about the meeting (I also attended) at Delmo when Mr. Conran explained the reorganization plan. But at this time our school board had already voted, and I have yet to meet a person that knew the school board was going to vote on such a plan until they already had.

The five hundred and seventy five people who signed these petitions only are asking for a chance to vote, so the people of our district can decide for ourselves what is best for our children, we need the best education we can give our children, and the closest to home.

I understand Sikeston has only offered us an education for our children. We are not asking for a position or anything of this sort, most of us are accustomed to working for a living, we are just asking for a chance to give our children the best education.

Mr. Dillon, Mr. Crumpecker, Mr. Sherrard, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Menees, all we want is a chance to vote - a New Madrid County mother of four school children.

Ann Landers

Inactivity Bores Couple

Dear Ann Landers: My husband and I have a nice home, well-furnished, a new car and money in the bank. Our two sons have finished college, are happily married and doing well. We have excellent jobs and our combined income makes it possible for us to live comfortably.

So why am I writing to Ann Landers? Because suddenly we find life empty and boring. We have no goals, nothing to struggle for. We were much happier when we had to worry about house payments, taxes, mortgages and tuition bills.

Are we different or does this happen to all couples in the twilight years? We need answers. --THE W'S

Dear W's: You need more than answers. You need to get out of your fur-lined, insulated world and become involved with some causes or projects or people to whom you can devote your time, energy and your money.

Contentment does not come from lapping up creature comforts and taking life easy. But this you already know, since this is the thrust of the problem as you have expressed it. Get busy and find out how to make your lives count for something. The world needs what you have to offer. And you need to become dues-paying members of the human race.

Dear Ann Landers: Several weeks ago, three of us (all college students) borrowed a buddy's car. I was driving. Unfortunately, we had an accident. Nobody was hurt but the damage to our buddy's car amounted to $175. There was no insurance so the money had to come out of my pocket. I think the two fellows with me should help with the repair bill. They say, "No. You were driving."

Is this fair? Answer in the paper because if my folks see a letter from you and find out I had another accident, I'll get grounded for life. - - BIG D

Dear D.: Another accident, eh? It sound as if you've got quite a history, fella. Maybe you SHOULD be grounded until you are taking some driving lessons, and I am not kidding.

First, I'd like to make it clear that anyone who drives without insurance is a moron. Second, you don't say who was at fault but I have an idea you were. In this case, your passengers should not be expected to pitch in. If someone had hit you and you were blameless I'd agree with you, but not under these circumstances.

Dear Ann Landers: My husband plays ball with the "boys" (about age 40) one night a week and comes home around 2:00 A.M.

Others nights he gets home anywhere from 7:30 to 11 P.M. He hasn't had dinner with me and our four teen-agers in three years.

This man has never brought home an extra dime for overtime and he hasn't had a raise in 10 years. I've been typing papers at home so we can pay our bills. Should I wake up and smell the coffee? -- QUIET DESPERATION

Dear Quiet -- Or are you unconscious? Did you just notice that your husband hasn't had dinner with his children in three years? It's going to be difficult to get him to stop doing whatever he's doing -- after all this time. You need more help than I can offer. I suggest a professional counselor. Yes, I know, he won't go. So go yourself and learn what you can do to get this 40-year-old teenybopper to behave like a husband and a father.

What is French kissing? Is it wrong? Who should set the necking limits -- the boy or the girl? Can a shotgun wedding succeed? Read Ann Landers' booklet, "Teen-age Sex - - Ten Ways To Cool It." Send 50¢ in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

If You Were the Judge

Husband Must Support Test Tube Infant

Lois and Marvin had been married for a number of years but their marriage produced no crops. Disappointed, Lois appealed to Marvin to allow her to have a test tube baby, and he reluctantly consented. Unfortunately, while science may solve one problem, it sometimes creates ten others. When the baby came, Marvin left.

Left stranded at the bassinette, Lois sued Marvin for his running out on her and demanded that he be ordered to support "their" child.

"It's not my kid," was Marvin's answer. "As far as I'm concerned, it's as illegitimate as a three dollar bill."

"That's not so," protested Lois. "Since he consented to my having the baby, he can't turn his back on it. It's 'our' child and he's got to support it."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you require Marvin to support the test tube child?

This is how the judge ruled: He held that Marvin's consent to the scientific baby did not make it any more legitimate than if he had consented to his wife's having a lover. But, the judge added, since he consented to its being born, he implied agreement to support the child and he must do so. (Based upon a 1963 New York Supreme Court Decision.)

Scott County HealthCenter

1966 Annual Report

In Scott County we have developed the philosophy that regulations are instructional tools-- to accomplish reasonable comfort and reasonable safety rather than inspection check procedures.

Simple inspection procedures will not generally lead to upgrading and will only lead to forced perpetual compliance with existing minimum standards.

Therefore, to provide for improvement, we in Scott County:

1. Hold annual food personnel training school for waitresses and cooks.
2. Hold dairy producer meetings and also meet frequently with plant personnel.
3. Work with City Councils to promote up-to-date ordinances concerning milk, food, garbage and refuse, insects and rodents, water and air pollution and many other health related problems.
4. Attend in-service training programs.

By providing a pleasant working climate between our office and all officials, we reflect a good compromise between what is ideal and what is reasonable.

The Scott County Sanitation programs cover a great number of minor activities that are too numerous to mention. Our years of experience, education, and training make us qualified to handle directly all phases of environmental sanitation.

Environmental sanitation involves the control of your environment in order to prevent disease outbreaks. This job involves a great many health fields. Your local Health Department carries out work in approximately 34 major health fields to control health hazards in your environment. If you will take but a moment to look over this list of health fields, you will realize what a vast job environmental sanitation is.

Kennedy Not Ready to Give Up Arms Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, defeated in a Senate skirmish over firearms legislation, said today the setback does not indicate that President Johnson's gun control proposal is doomed.

But a Republican foe of the administration measure said the Senate decision to continue the Pentagon's civilian markmanship program pointed in that direction.

"I think it is an indication of the attitude of the Senate on matters of this kind," Sen. Roman L. Hruska, R.Neb., said in an interview.

Kennedy tried Tuesday to eliminate from the defense appropriations bill funds for operation of the 65-year-old civilian markmanship program, administered by the National Rifle Association.

The Senate voted 67 to 23 against his amendment, which also would have halted free distribution of ammunition to NRA marksmen's clubs and their nearly 385,000 members.

Kennedy, a Massachusetts Democrat, said the program is costing the government $5 to $10 million a year, and based his argument on economy.

The Pentagon has estimated its cost at about $4 million, and has said the Johnson gun control measure would not interfere with operation of the program.

Kennedy issued a statement
